BOSTON RICH CONDEMNED BY DR. RICHMOND

TAKES FLING AT HARVARD

The modern society woman is as flippant as Salome.

The curse of the Episcopal Church has always been her respectability.

Why was it Dr. Lawrence had no message to give the striking Lawrence millhands? My answer is that the Bishop of Massachusetts is a bishop to the society folk of Boston, not to the millhands.

The industrial lords of Commonwealth avenue are to blame for that strike.

General Bancroft fails to understand the trend of industrial life. He must deal with the labor union.

Only the social riff-raff of our fashionable shore resorts will dance after midnight Saturday.

There is too much irreverence, indecency and Godlessness among our social idlers.

Yale, Harvard and other universities are not leading in settlement of industrial problems because they want to stand in with our financial leaders, hoping to get more money for professors' salaries and new buildings.—From Dr. George Chalmers Richmond's sermon to Narragansett Pier society this morning.

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., July 27.—The Rev. George Chalmers Richmond, D. D., of Philadelphia, one of the most prominent Episcopal clergymen in the land, will tell "Uncle Trusty and Family" tomorrow morning just what he thinks of 'em, right to Uncle Trusty's own face. The AMERICAN has obtained an extract from his sermon in advance.

Dr Richmond will occupy the pulpit of St. Peter's-by-the-Sea. The congregation of St. Peter's, in the Summer time especially, represents the richest element in the Episcopal Church.

Dr. Richmond proposes at morning service to speak plainly about society, the Episcopal Church, Bishop Lawrence, the Lawrence mill strike, General Bancroft, the Boston Elevated strike, Harvard and Yale's relation to rich patrons and other topics.

Denounced "Smart Set."

There have been few Episcopal clergymen more conspicuous of late years than Dr. Richmond. He was the first to denounce the Astor-Force engagement. From his pulpit in St. John's Church, Philadelphia, he has attacked the "smart set" vigorously. He has become involved in bitter controversies with his own ecclesiastical superiors. He is the man who said Colonel Roosevelt is more like Christ would be, if on earth, than any other man in public life.

Praises Hearst Papers.

A reporter called on the pastor at the Atlantic House. There is so much excitement over what the preacher is going to say that the reporter suggested the sermon be published in the Sunday AMERICAN. Dr. Richmond smiled and replied.

"I can see no reason why the half million readers of the AMERICAN shouldn't read my sermon tomorrow morning. In fact, I think that there is no better way for me to tell New Englanders some of my views than by talking through the AMERICAN.

"I am a great admirer of the Hearst newspapers. They have done wonderful things for the American people. I know the policy of the Boston AMERICAN and wish there were more papers like it in Boston. It stands for the better things in our social and industrial life. When one analyzes the great things which the Hearst papers have done in this country, it is really astounding."

Then Dr. Richmond began to outline what he would say. His notes were written on small sheets of paper, but he was able to give the reporter the salient features of the sermon. Before starting he touched on the cabaret show. He said:

"Wine flowed, jeweled ladies applauded the dancers, and then the big event of the evening was announced. The master of ceremonies said: 'The Turkey Trot will now be given in full form,' and everybody seemed to enjoy it. Such proceedings ought to be stopped. It simply illustrates what society will stand for."

The sermon in part follows:

The modern society woman is really

Steam Roller Kills Grizzly Bear (Dance)

Senator Crane's Daughter-In-Law Uses Republican Machine Methods at Country Club.

PITTSFIELD, July 27.—Following the decisive methods used by her distinguished father-in-law in politics, Mrs. Winthrop Murray Crane, Jr., backed by other women members of the Pittsfield Country Club, has driven a steam-roller over the turkey trot, the bunny hug and other dances they consider unsuitable for the club.

> The turkey-trot, grizzly-bear, bunny-hug and all similar dances are prohibited at this club.
> —Entertainment Committee.

Some of the gayer young members of the club sniffed at the notice and said: "Huh! we'll boycott the old club if they shut off all the fun."

But the conservative element says: "Hope some of them do boycott the club. Means they won't trouble us with their company."

KERMIT SAILS FOR BRAZIL.

Roosevelt's Son to Learn Railroading in South America.

OYSTER BAY, July 27.—Kermit Roosevelt, son of the ex-President, is going to embark in railroading in South America. He sailed today for Brazil. It is understood that Kermit intends to stick to the proposition for at least two years, beginning at the very bottom of the ladder.

Kermit loses his first presidential vote by leaving now. He dearly wanted to cast this first vote for his father, but the railroad proposition could not wait. "Any how, I think they'll elect you without my vote," he observed to his father shortly before he left. Kermit is twenty-three-years-old.

MIKADO UNCHANGED.

Robust Constitution Aids Strong Fight for Life.

TOKIO, July 27.—The condition of the Emperor was unchanged this evening. Owing to the nature of his illness, which is described as comprising nephritis, diabetes and uremic poisoning, he is unable to take much nourishment, and his strength diminishes daily. Since July 19, he has been in a very critical condition and only his robust constitution has enabled him to maintain life.

GABY DESLYS TO RETURN.

L STRIKERS AT BIG RALLY VOTE FOR PEACE PLAN

"LOYAL" MEN TO APPEAL

Striking employes of the Boston Elevated Railroad who jammed Faneuil Hall last night voted unanimously to authorize the executive committee of their union to carry out the provisions of the settlement of the trouble agreed upon at the conference held at the State House.

Settlement Provisions.

These provisions are:

(1.) The Boston Elevated Railway Company in the employment and discharge of men, will not discriminate as between men who do or do not belong to any labor organization, any employe being at liberty to belong or not to belong to any such organization. The company will meet its employes for the discussion of grievances, whether they come as individuals or as representatives of any organization of the employes.

(2.) Any committee to adjust differences with the company to have the right to a reasonable leave of absence for that purpose, and men who are in the service of any organization not to be debarred from returning to their respective positions and ratings in the service of the company, after they have finished their service with such organization.

(3.) The State Board of Conciliation and Arbitration to determine what men shall be taken back by the company and the time within which they shall be taken back, their decision to be final.

(4) The men who are out of the city to have a reasonable opportunity to return in order to report.

(5) In the future, grievances or difficulties concerning wages or conditions of labor which cannot be adjusted between the company and the organization, to be referred to the State Board of Conciliation and Arbitration, or, if that is not agreeable to the company, to a board composed as follows: One man to be selected by the organization, one by the company, and if these two cannot agree upon a third arbitrator within ten days, the third party to be chosen by the Mayor of the city of Boston.

(6.) If these propositions are accepted the company will post notices to that effect in all its car barns.

(7.) If the foregoing arrangement is agreed to, the strike to be called off at once.

What Is to Be Done.

There remain two things to be done before the strike of seven weeks, which has cost $1,000,000, ends—the ratification of the agreement by the Board of Directors of the Boston Elevated Company, at a meeting to be held tomorrow, and the decision of the State Board of Conciliation and Arbitration as to who shall return to work and under what conditions.

It was confidently believed by the leaders of the strike last night that the Elevated company would agree to the plan to settle the fight on Monday, and that Chairman Howland would immediately call a meeting of the arbitration board and decide about the men returning to work.

There seemed to be a misunderstanding between Mr. Vahey and the Boston Elevated Railway Company over the selection of a third man to arbitrate differences between the men and the company in case the two men selected by each side could not agree on a third man. Mr. Vahey reported that the Elevated Company wanted Justice Aiken settled on as a third man in such a case, while the agreement had been that the Mayor of the city should select the third man.

Chief Justice Aiken said last night:

"Though I consider service on the arbitration committee is similar to judicial work on the bench, I do not believe it is my place to serve on the board. I would prefer not to have any part in the matter and so I shall refuse to accept the invitation."

In a letter written by President Bancroft to Mr. Vahey last night this matter was cleared up, and Mr. Bancroft approves of what Mr. Vahey says was the first agreement, and which is satisfactory to the strikers. In his letter President Bancroft says:

"I hereby notify you, therefore, that I am authorized to agree to recommend either that the clause be left out altogether or that it be as follows:

"Future grievances or difficulties concerning wages or conditions of labor which cannot be adjusted between the company and any of its employees to be referred to the State Board of Conciliation and Arbitration, or, if that is not agreeable to the company, to a board composed as follows: One man to be selected by such employees, one by the company, and if these two cannot agree upon a third arbitrator within ten days, the third party to be chosen by the Mayor of the City of Boston."

The "loyal" employes of the Elevated consider they have not been fairly treated and will present their grievances to the Board of Conciliation.

Governor Foss Edits Sunday American

Calls Elevated Story the Big News

Today's Governor-Editor Wrote Nothing Except the Editorial Which Appears Over His Signature. What He Thinks About Other Important Questions of the Day, However, Appears Herewith in a Stenographic Interview. In the Picture the Governor is Shown Making the Final Corrections of His Editorial. He Pulled the Editorial Apart More Than Once, to the Great Distress of the Composing Room. The Bright Looking Youth in the Photograph is an AMERICAN Office Boy, Walter Coughlin. Walter Has Just Come From the Composing Room With Orders to "Get Those Corrections in Two Minutes." But the Foss Spell Is on W. Coughlan and the Photographer Has Caught Him Taking His Time About It.

GOVERNOR FOSS said last night that he rather liked the idea of being the editor of a great Sunday newspaper, but that for his part he would prefer being editor some week when there was not a great labor dispute to be settled, troops to review, and the like of that.

The Governor began his editorial day deeply immersed in what it was hoped might be the final stages of the "L" strike. He closed it at Fort Warren, reviewing the troops as Commander-in-Chief.

The picture shows Governor-Editor Foss looking over the final proofs of his three-page editorial, the big feature of today's AMERICAN.

The Governor-Editor was what printers might call exceedingly fussy about those proofs. Several times he cut a section of three or four hundred words out of his editorial and wrote in something new. You will note, too, that he was remarkably careful about punctuation.

Meanwhile, as the time to "go to press" approached, there would come a cry for the corrections.

The AMERICAN office boy in the picture had a hard day of it.

The big chief in the composing room would rush Walter off to get the editor's corrections and Walter would start "flying."

Then the Governor-Editor would talk to the office boy in that nice Foss way of his and Walter would forget the folks down stairs and only remember that he was helping a Governor.

SETTLEMENT "BIG ACHIEVEMENT."

To the reporter who stepped up to the editorial desk to get the views of the Governor-Editor on the news of the day Governor Foss said that by all odds the big story was the expected settlement of the strike on the Elevated. The Governor said:

> The preliminary agreement already reached is a notable achievement.
> It gives added weight to the principle of industrial arbitration by a public board of conciliation; it promises well for the future usefulness of this principle.

TOO FAT? TOO LEAN? TRY MALDEN, QUICK

Mr. William Dunn Is Done by the Weighing Machines; Now They're Done.

A man can lose flesh quicker and gain it again with greater celerity in Malden than in any other place known to William E. Dunn of that city, he declares. Dunn has tested it. Normally he weighs 147 pounds.

Not feeling just right yesterday he weighed himself again. He found that he had lost five pounds. He took a walk and weighed himself again. He had shrunk ten pounds. He began to get scared. He tried it again—two more pounds gone

Taking a long walk, he again sought the scales. Ah, he gained five pounds. He bought a cigar, was weighed again in a different part of the city. The smoke had boosted him ten pounds. Twenty-eight times he changed weight out of a possible forty.

The scales were of the penny-in-the-slot variety. Being sealer of weights and measures, Mr. Dunn will put the scales that fooled with his avoirdupois out of business.

$200,000 AUGUSTA BLAZE.

Lumber Yard Blaze Spreads Fast. Schooner in Flames.

AUGUSTA, Me., July 28.—The plant of the Augusta Lumber Company was almost destroyed by a fire which started in the dry sheds last evening. Early this morning the fire department had the flames under control. The estimated loss is between $150,000 and $200,000. The fire was discovered by William Pinkham, the night watchman. So rapidly did the flames spread the Schooner Leona M. Thurlow, tied up at the wharf, was ablaze before she could be warped into the stream. With her sails and rigging afire the crew had hard work to save the craft, which was badly damaged.

BULL MOOSE TO PUT FULL STATE TICKET IN THE FIELD

Faneuil Hall Rocks With Enthusiasm When This Announcement Is Made From Platform at First Convention

Delegates Pledged for Roosevelt and Johnson at Chicago, Presidential Electors Selected and Declaration of Principles Made

FANEUIL HALL, the old Cradle of Liberty, rocked with enthusiasm and was a-flutter with bandanas yesterday afternoon when the Bull Moose adherents of Massachusetts held their first State convention there. The historic hall was crowded. Many women were in the balcony. The delegates to the Chicago convention were pledged by a vote of the convention to vote for Roosevelt for President and Governor Hiram Johnson of California for Vice-President.

Features of the Convention.

Som of the features of the first Massachusetts conventions of the Bull Moosers were: The aisles of the hall were filled. Everybody wanted to talk. Women filled the balcony. Many old Independent Leaguers were there. Cergymen of Protestant and Catholic churches were present. Some Socialists were in the audience. They had an orchestra instead of the regulation band. Women voted just as though they were part of the convention. Three women were chosen delegates. An equal-suffrage plank was adopted in the platform. Three prominent Rooseveltians were not there—Arthur Dehon Hill, Matthew Hale and Charles S. Bird. The convention lasted three hours.

Russell A. Wood, temporary chairman, who called the convention to order, sprung a surprise and raised the audience to its feet by announcing that the Roosevelt party would put a full State ticket in the field this Fall. The applause that followed this statement was long and loud.

"We will have a candidate for Governor, one for Lieutenant-Governor and for all of the State offices," asserted Mr. Wood, "and they will all be regular Roosevelt third party men with no connection with the Republican machine.

"We have decided also that no candidate of any party shall be indorsed for Congress, Senate or House until after the primaries, and not then until he unqualifiedly takes his stand for Roosevelt and Progressive principles."

This decision seemed to hit everybody just right. They clapped and cheered. Bandanas were waved. The women participated in the demonstration.

Minister Creates Commotion.

The Rev. William David Gale of Cambridge, once candidate for Governor of Alabama on the Prohibition ticket, threw the convention in an uproar while the committees were getting their reports ready, by reading a number of resolutions which he wanted put in the platform. The resolutions were mingled with hisses and cheers. There were cries of "put him out!" Some of those present left.

One resolution was that Ettor, in the Lawrence strike, did not get a square deal. Another opposed the election of anybody who favored the use of soft coal in Boston. The third favored the State taking over all public utilities and especially the Boston railway system. The resolutions were finally taken to the platform committee. When an attempt was made to cut Gale short Timothy W. Coakley led a fight for him. A vote was taken at which men and women alike voted and he was allowed to finish.

"I'm going," he said, "I don't fancy the dope."

Dr. Frederick P. Glasier of Hudson, from the floor nominated Former Mayor Frederick Fosdick of Fitchburg for permanent chairman. There wasn't even the ghost of a steam roller in sight. Mr. Fosdick went in unanimously.

Chairman Fosdick's speech lasted half an hour. He declared that the "need of the hour is a third party." He said it was needed just as much as was the third party when it was born. He characterized the Chicago Republican convention as one of "fraud and tyranny."

"If we are behind the times and have ceased to be factors," said Chairman Fosdick, "I am satisfied to go to pieces with a crowd like this. I thought when the new party came, as I knew it would, it would be called the 'Demopublican Party.' We have that party in the National Progressive party."

Roosevelt Best Doctor.

Chairman Fosdick said that conditions were such in this country that it needed medicine and that the best doctor to administer the medicine was Theodore Roosevelt. He said that the Republican National Committee at Chicago felt themselves "above Almighty God."

"Gentlemen," asked Chairman Fosdick, "did you send me to Chicago to have Elihu Root to tell me how to vote?"

"No," thundered the audience.

"I said," continued the chairman, "that Massachusetts would repudiate the steal—are you going to back me up?"

"Yes," came in a shout.

The new party, asserted Fosdick, is in the field to "clean 'em up" this Fall and fight for the people.

Three Women Delegates.

The thirty-six delegates to the national convention, each of whom has half a vote, and three of whom are women, are:

Adelard M. Potvin, Holyoke.
Richard T. Talbot, Springfield.
T. Frank Drake, Springfield.
Frank Kinsman, Leominster.
J. W. Whittaker, Gardner.

16—Frank E. Ramsdell.

AT LARGE.

Rev. Cassius A. Ward of Gloucester.
Max Mitchell of Boston.

A declaration of principles was adopted to be added to after the Chicago convention.

The declaration follows:

We invite men and women of every race and color, of every religious belief and of every former political allegiance, to join with us equally in forming the ranks and organization of a new State and national party.

We assert that this new party is based upon a demand for honesty in political life, for equal opportunity, for the relief from oppression by special privileges, for social and industrial justice and true representative government with the people in control.

We instruct our representatives at the National Convention in Chicago on August 5 to take part in the adoption of a platform of principles for national issues, and herewith collectively express our intention of subscribing to this National platform when so adopted.

Believing that the Commonwealth has no material resources comparable with its citizens, no hope of perpetuity, except in the intelligence and integrity of its people, and that if equal opportunity is lost, nothing can save the future of the Commonwealth, we demand laws providing for:

1—The initiative, so that a body of citizens of their own right and without interposition by legislative committees may demand consideration and decision of any question by the Legislature of this Commonwealth.

2—The referendum, so that upon demand by a body of citizens or by a percentage of members of both branches of the Legislature, a law which has been enacted may be repealed, or a law which has failed of enactment may be enacted by direct vote of the people. This would make the Legislature of maximum service to the people and insure to the people, the final word on what the laws shall be.

3—Direct election of United States Senators.

4—Proper administration and extension of direct primaries to all elective offices, so that the people and not special interests may select candidates.

5—Equal suffrage, because in a democracy the right of every full-grown human being to share in government should not be withheld.

6—More equitable system of taxation to lighten the burdens of both labor and legitimate capital, and to increase the opportunity of each.

7—The enforcement of the principles enunciated in the Declaration of Independence, and the fourteenth and fifteenth ammendments to the Constitution insuring the equality of all men before the law, equal political rights and equal industrial opportunities for all American citizens in all parts of the Republic and without regard to race or color.

We deplore the prevalence of lynch law and pledge ourselves as far as in us lies to the extirpation of this evil.

8. An Industrial Board, the duty of which shall be to report to the citizens periodically upon the condition and needs of labor in the Commonwealth, to recommend labor legislation and upon application of a body of citizens report promptly and publicly upon the merits of any industrial controversy.

9. The policy of extending regulation of public utilities and other business rather than interference with the natural economic tendency toward consolidation.

ATTACKS 'LORDS OF COMMONWEALTH AV.'

as flippant as Salome. She disregards ethics and gets very vexed when criticised. Many times a poor girl has married a rich man and then plunged headlong into society, believing that it was her duty to maintain her husband's station in life. Such a woman is really not a factor in giving moral influence.

There is precious little moral masculinity or real Christianity in our university leadership today, especially in the East. Many of us are coming to despair of our ecclesiastical leadership. The curse of the Episcopal church has always been her respectability.

We are afraid to soil or dirty our hands with the unclean problems of our industrial life. These problems strike our very doorsteps. I saw this in Lawrence last Winter. About all our churches did in that city was to lament existing conditions, to dole out bread and clothing and to denounce the I. W. W. Lamentation and denunciation have always been serviceable staples among religious people.

"Christianity Lacking."

One reason why that strike in Lawrence took place was a lack of real Christianity among the people who draw the wealth from the mills of Lawrence. The industrial lords, who live in Commonwealth avenue, Boston, during part of the Winter, traveling in the Holy Land during Lent and rounding up at Bar Harbor or Newport about this time of the year, are to blame for the strike.

Why was it that the Episcopal bishop of Massachusetts, our beloved Dr. Lawrence, had no message to give the striking hands of his own city of Lawrence during the awful days last Winter? Bishop Lawrence is one of the ablest administrators of the church in this country. He is a leading spirit in raising our missionary apportionment and has brought his diocese to the forefront by reason of his financial management. All this is well and good, but why has he no message to give as a prophet of God to the men and women whose blood is being used by the lords and ladies of Commonwealth avenue?

My answer is that the bishop of Massachusetts lacks the spirit that characterized the spirit of John the Baptist. He is a bishop to the society folks of Boston; not to the mill hands.

"L" Strike Sign of Conflict.

Too long have the wealthy men and women of influence in this country disregarded the wants of the workers. Witness the present strike on the Boston Elevated. This strike is but one sign of the social conflict now on. I am informed and believe that no street railway company in the country treats its men individually in a kindlier spirt than does General Bancroft's concern.

General Bancroft, like our big Republican bosses today, fails to understand the trend and tendency of our industrial life. He is old-fashioned in his views. His attitude, if maintained continuously, will do more to cause industrial anarchy than the ravings of Emma Goldman and excoriations of Eugene Debs. General Bancroft, in his financial transactions, deals with the president of this bank or that bank. He cannot secure a loan of money these days which amounts to any consideration without dealing with the head of a large financial institution. He must meet money in the mass. So in his dealings with labor. He must deal with the labor union. The labor union is the only institution in American life today that is out and out the friend of the laboring man.

The Peril of Frivolity.

Frivolity is a danver of our time. One of the great dangers in our time is the frivolity of women in high life who ride about in their husbands' automobiles.

The women of Newport who have decided to discontinue dancing before the hour of midnight Saturday, thus showing their reverence for God's holy word and the ordinances of our holy religion, are setting a good example to all of our so-called society set.

Only the social riff-raff of our fashionable shore resorts will dance after midnight, thus trespassing on the Lord's day. Those who refuse to follow the example of such society women as Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish should be condemned by the church and by all those who desire to uphold the traditions of our American democracy. There is too much irreverence, indecency and Godlessness among our social idlers at the American Summer resorts. I trust that these things will never invade the social precincts of our Casino here. Nature's claim to our awe and admiration is through its solidity, seriousness and stability. Don't try to be witty.

MISS DESMOND TO WED.

Medford Teacher to Be Bride of Charles T. Daly.

Invitations have been issued to the wedding of Miss Getrude P. Desmond, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Desmond of No. 51 Brookings street, Medford, a teacher in the Lincoln Grammar School of that city, to Charles T. Daly, son of Mrs. Honora Daly of 11 Monument street, Medford. The wedding will take place at St. Joseph's Church, Medford, at 7:30 a. m., August 12. The bride-to-be is a graduate of Salem Normal School. The groom is a Boston newspaper man.

REV. G. C. RICHMOND, NOTED PASTOR, WHO ATTACKS SOCIETY

REV·GEORGE C. RICHMOND

KOSHER BUTCHERING DEFENDED BY RABBI

Rabbi Max Ravreby, who in his official capacity at the Brighton abatoir kills half the stock used by his people, takes issue with Dr. Francis H. Rowley, president of the S. P. C. A., relative to the methods of kosher killing.

In a signed editorial in 'Our Dumb Animals," the organ of the society, Dr. Rowley says the Jewish religion demands that the throat of an animal be cut, and that it shall be permitted to bleed to death, thus inflicting much suffering.

Rabbi Ravreby says Dr. Rowley is in error.

"There is nothing in the Jewish religion which demands that an animal should bleed to death. We cut the throat of an animal and death is instantaneous. The animal is hung up and naturally the blood runs off. It is for the purpose of having every particle of blood removed that we hang the animal up. In this State, as Dr. Rowley says, the animal is stunned following the use of the knife. There is none of the suffering which he attempts to describe. Every rabbi in this city will support my view. I don't want it understood that I am looking for a controversy on this question, but I think our side should be told."

HONEYMOON COUPLE PILOT AIR RACERS

Married Just Before Balloon, First of Nine Ascends in Elimination Trials.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 27.—Honeymooning in endless miles of starlit space, a pair of newlyweds are riding in the basket of the pilot balloon Kansas City III, tonight, in the aerial endurance contest which is to decide which three balloons shall carry the Stars and Stripes in the international flight in Germany next Fall.

The bridegroom is Dr. Milo E. Hartman, and the bride was Miss Violet Davis of Kansas City. They were married in the basket of the big bag this afternoon, with the pilot as best man, and then, just as the last words of the service were read, the ropes were released and the balloon leaped into the air.

The Kansas City III. was well away before the Uncle Sam, representing the Kansas City Aero Club, ascended. After that the great globes went up regularly at ten minute intervals. The weather was ideal, the pilots confident, and there was little choice as to possible winners.

Pilot balloon, Kansas City III. (non-contestant), Frank M. Jacobs, pilot.

Cole (Indianapolis Aero Club), Dr. L. E. Custer, pilot, Andrew Farrell, aide.

SHOW RUSSELL PICTURES.

Featured in Melrose Windows During Will Hearing.

Pictures of the rival Russell claimants for the estate of the late Senior Daniel Russell have made their appearance in some of the store windows in Melrose, the home town of the Russells, so great has become the interest in the contest now on trial.

Several pictures of Dakota Dan have appeared in the windows, but thus far only one photograph of Fresno Dan was shown in a store window. It was placed there by an employe. It was ordered removed by the proprietor as soon as he learned of it.

In the barber shop of Peter J. Curran on West Foster street, opposite to the hotel formerly conducted by Dakota Dan, appeared the first photograph. Other storekeepers promptly followed suit and several store windows now have them.

LAWYER SIMPSON COMING.

Former Counsel for Dakota Dan to Aid Russell Contest.

Attorney Leslie R. Simpson of Dickinson, N. D., who was counsel for Dakota Dan at the first trial of the Russell will case, will probably take a hand in the present hearings. Senator Simpson is expected in Boston in about three weeks. He has been campaigning in his home State and has secured the Republican nomination for Congress in his district. During his visit here he will make a brief visit to his old home n Portland, Me.

"Dan" Fight Fails to Stagger Melrose

With the annual report of Chief of Police George E. Kerr, out yesterday and from cover to cover as full of thrills as "The Simple Life," Melrose qualified as the banner blue ribbon city of the United States.

Melrose is a regular city of 15,721 people without a saloon and without a speak-easy.

The report of Chief Kerr shows that in the 365 days of 1911 the total number of Melrose arrests for drunkenness was 132, a drop of fifteen from the previous year.

Very few of the 132 were residents of Melrose, where the favorite tipple is ice cream soda.

2 WOMEN HURT IN DORCHESTER CRASH

Two women were severely hurt, a score of men and women frightened and shaken up and two cars were damaged when a Franklin Park electric car ran into the rear of a Meeting House Hill car at the rush hour yesterday evening at Edward Everett square, Dorchester. The injured women are:

Mrs. John Collins of No. 164 Willard street, Quincy. Her spine was injured.

Miss Helen Denahy of No. 20 Belden street, Roxbury. She is seventeen years old. She was about to board one of the cars and was hurled to the street, suffering bruises and shock.

REPUBLICANS UNITE AND PASS SUGAR BILL

Lodge-Bristow Substitute, It Is Claimed, Will Save Consumer $25,000,000 a Year.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The Republican regulars and progressives got together on a tariff bill for the first time in this Congress today, and passed the sugar schedule tariff bill, as prepared by Senator Bristow.

Every Republican, and Senators Foster and Thornton, the two Democrats from Louisiana, the Cane-Sugar State, supported the measure. All other Democratic votes were cast for the Williams substitute. The line-up was 57 to 25, but on the final passage of the bill, after all amendments had been defeated, the vote was 52 to 3.

Under the terms of the bill adopted, and which Senator Burton stated in the course of the debate that the President would approve, the duty on pure sugar is reduced from $1.90 a hundred pounds as in the present law, to $1.60. The differential, which has given the trust 7½ cents on every hundred pounds of sugar as a bonus, is eliminated, as also is the Dutch standard, under which the trust has been enabled to compel every pound of light colored sugar imported to pay the same duty as refined.

May Save Consumer $25,000,000.

The net saving to the consumer may not be visible in these figures, but it is argued that the bill will very materially reduce the enormous profits of the sugar trust in the future.

There is a concession of 20 per cent. on sugars imported from Cuba. Senator Bristow this afternoon, after the bill had been passed, pointed out that the bulk of all sugars imported come from this island, which will bring the rate on Cuban sugars down to about $1.20 per hundred pounds.

Careful computations, based upon the importations of 1911, show that a loss in revenue of approximately $5,500,000 per year will result through these reduced rates, but Senator Bristow asserts that the American consumer will save more than $25,000,000 annually.

The elimination of the duties standard has long been fought for, and a notable struggle along this line was made during the Payne-Aldrich bill debate when Senator Bristow devoted three rays to an exhaustive review of the sugar question, endeavoring to prove to the Senate that this one provision was of incalcuable advantage to the sugar refineries.

Light Browns May Be Popular.

Under that provision, no matter how pure a brown sugar might be, the color standard was what it was measured by, and the refiners got hold of it for purposes of refining. Under the proposed law all sugars will pay duty on their absolute purity, and the light browns of high purity so common years ago, will probably again be found in the market.

The Democrats stood by the Williams bill so long as it had any parliamentary status. It was rejected when it was offered as a substitute for the Lodge-Bristow bill by a vote of 36 to 24, Senators Foster and Thornton again refusing to support the measure.

The negative votes on the final passage of the bill were cast by Senators Foster and Thornton (Democrats) of Louisiana, and Heyburn (Republican) of Idaho.

Five hours of debate preceded this action. Senator Lodge, in a set speech, made a bitter attack on American cane sugar refiners, whom he charged with attempting to strike down the American beet sugar producers by fighting for free or greatly reduced duties on raw sugar. The only sugar refinery that had urged free sugar, Senator Lodge said, was the Spreckles establishment. Neither the American Sugar Refining Company nor the Arbuckles, he declared, had been a party to this campaign for free sugar.

"NO-BODY LOVES A BALD MAN"

Every day we see YOUNG men and women, who have grown prematurely grey. They immediately fall into the "Old Age" class, because grey hairs are so closely associated WITH OLD AGE.

It is extremely discomforting and humiliating to be bald—to be grey when the years do not justify it. The girls laugh at the young men so marred—the young man soon learns to discriminate between natural hair in its full bloom of health and NATURAL COLOR, and shabby looking grey and faded hair.

Give nature a chance. If she is encouraged, stimulated, assisted, she will give you a head of hair that you will be proud of.

MISS GORDON AND HER HOSE.

BRETTON WOODS, N. H., July 27.—A handsome young woman, wearing stockings of sure-enough gold that cost $125 a pair, has taken the breath away from folk in the Summer colony here. She is Miss Aline Gordon, and her—er—er—hose, embroidered with birds of paradise and emerald snakes and other gorgeous creations have reated a furor.

Miss Gordon is the first to bring the latest Viennese fad along the hosiery line into New England, and because of one special pair of wondrous stockings she wears she has been called the "Girl with the Gold Stockings."

Miss Gordon even consented to talk about the sunset tinted stockings. She alsoc onsented to show the stockings—but only to a woman reporter. And the woman reporter says the stockings were well worth the stir they have created in the Summer colony.

There is one pair of genuine golden thread, and these look simply stunning. There's another pair with birds of paradise in shades of gold worked in silken threads up the front. There's yet another pair—Miss Gordon says these are her favorites—which are made in a shade of green with a brilliant emerald snake twined about the ankle, its head on the instep. The snake has beaded eyes and a bright scarlet forked tongue.

When first approached by the woman reporter, Miss Gordon wasn't inclined to talk. Later on—doubtless because it was a woman who had asked the question about the gold stockings—Miss Gordon did say that "really, she didn't understand why hosiery should interest anybody or be considered anything unusual.

"You see embroidered stockings were the latest fad in Vienna, where I have just been visiting," declared Miss Gordon. "On my way home from Carlsbad, I stopped in Vienna and there I purchased several pairs of these stockings. Yes, some of them are embroidered, but you know embroidered stockings have been worn for several years and there is nothing startling about them."

Miss Gordon declared that at Carlsbad a pair of stockings worn by a Russian princess had caused a furor. The pair was made of woven silver threads and were worn with a pair of cloth silver slippers, the heels of which were studded with rhinestones.

"They were a trifle too bizarre to be in good taste," explained Miss Gordon. "But the cloth of gold gown worn with stockings woven from gold thread are not half as strange as they sound."

PROMISE ANOTHER ROSENTHAL ARREST

Authorities Trail One of Men They Say Did Killing; New Story of Crime.

NEW YORK, July 27.—Despite what District Attorney Whitman declares to be efforts on the part of the Police Department to delay the investigation of the murder of Herman Rosenthal, it was announced today that another arrest would be made tomorrow. This arrest, it is understood, will be of one of the four men who did the killing.

On top of this came the further statement that unless Mayor Gaynor calls a special meeting of the Board of Aldermen to vote on the question of an investigation of the police and the Rosenthal murder, a writ of mandamus compelling him to do so will be served on him. This was the plan decided on today by the seventeen Aldermen who yesterday petitioned the Mayor to call such a meeting. Alderman Henry Curran, chairman of the finance committee, is heading the movement for the investigation.

Held Without Bail.

"Jack Sullivan," king of the newsboys, whose right name is Jacob A. Reich, was arraigned this morning before Coroner Feinberg on a charge of homicide, and was held without bail until Monday. Sullivan is the man who passed the grater part of the night of the murder riding about New York in an automobile with Lieutenant Charles Becker, the police official who is alleged to have been the recipient of the gambling graft.

Sullivan's arrest followed his identification as one of the murder gang by Louis Kress, a waiter. Kress has a body guard, night and day, through fear of an attempt on his life by one of the gang's involved.

Police headquarters today was filled with the story that if Lieutenant Becker did take graft from gamblers he was deceiving the law breakers when he did it, as he could not deliver the protection for which men of Rosenthal's type thought they were paying. It was pointed out that there are three raiding squads, each independent of the other two, and that every member of all three would have to be involved to insure protection.

It was declared by the officer who made this statement that if the courts would admit all the evidence in the cases against the gamblers every resort of this kind in New York could be closed in a short time.

As a matter of fact, though twelve days have passed since the assassination of Rosenthal, the authorities are as far from having their hands on any of the men who fired the shots, with evidence to convict, as they have been since the killing.

New Story of Killing.

Half a hundred persons saw Rosenthal shot, yet only one witness has been found who could identify absolutely one of the prisoners as a member of the murder party. Lieutenant Becker has told his story of the night of the murder, and it tallies closely with that of Jack Sullivan, who claims to have been with Becker, but it sheds no new light on the killing.

Through the underworld today there passed a new story of the killing of Rosenthal, a story which, though nearly 500 policemen have been working on the case, has not reached the ears of the authorities.

It said that Rosenthal was offered $5,000 to "forget" his promise to take evidence of the gambling police graft to District Attorney Whitman and to leave New York for six months. He was so angry at the police department that he refused the $5,000. Then an affidavit was obtained from Dora Gilbert, Rosenthal's first wife, detailing the past life of the gambler and laying bare certain secrets, which, had they become public, would have compelled him to leave New York.

Then They Killed Him.

When the Gilbert woman came to sign the affidavit, however, she cut out some of the most damaging statements, and the men who were after Rosenthal, seeing that neither the offer of $5,000 nor the woman's story would drive the gambler from the city, killed him.

Rosenthal was to have met these men at the Metropole at the moment when he was killed for a final decision on the $5,000 offer. Once and for all he rejected it. This is the story which the Tenderloin believes to be the true version of the killing.

Charles H. Hyde, former city chamberlain, right hand man of Mayor Gaynor, was brought into the case today by a statement of Mrs. Lillian Rosenthal, widow of the murdered gambler. She declared Rosenthal went to see Hyde, knowing he controlled the big gambling situation, to plead with Hyde to let him reopen his gambling resort. Hyde refused to aid him.

Detective William J. Burns arrived in New York today, fresh from the indictment of several aldermen of Detroit for accepting bribes. Late this afternoon Burns took charge of the work of his men in the Rosenthal case.

MERCHANTS' WEEK

Mayor Seeks Presidential Candidates as Guests.

At a meeting of the two branches of the Malden city government tomorrow night Mayor George L. Farrell will ask an appropriation of $500 towards the observance of Malden's Merchants' Week in September. The Mayor is making an effort to have President Taft, Colonel Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson guests of the city one day during the celebration, and he will also entertain the Mayors of Bay State cities.

WINCHESTER AUTO ACCIDENT INJURES 7

Tire Bursts and Car Overturns; Edward Tate Badly Hurt and Others Bruised.

One person was seriously injured and six others received cuts and bruises when a big touring car turned turtle on Highland avenue, Winchester, late yesterday afternoon. The injured are:

EDWARD TATE, Dartmouth street, Malden. Severe shock.

TWO SONS of Edward Tate and their wives. Minor cuts and bruises.

THERESA O'BRIEN, 365 Summer street, East Boston. Cuts and bruises.

MAUD GUPTILL, No. 11 Boston avenue, Somerville. Cuts and bruises.

Edward Tate, owner of the car, and the one most seriously injured, is at his home in a critical condition. He is eighty years old and was just recovering from a severe illness. All the other occupants of the car were treated at the house of Frank Winn, on Highland avenue, and then sent to their homes.

The auto was speeding along at a good clip down Highland avenue toward Stoneham, when a tire on one of the front wheels burst. This caused the wheel to collapse, and the car turned turtle. The occupants were hurled several feet. Doctors Putnam, Brown and McCarthy, who live close to the scene of the accident, were called and treated the injured.

Socialist Heckled By Miss Nora Iasigi

Oregon Speaker Is Silenced by Brookline Girl in Stockbridge Town Hall.

PITTSFIELD, July 27.—Miss Nora Iasigi, a popular Brookline girl, who is leader among the younger cottager set in Stockbridge, caused a commotion among the fashionable set at the Town Hall by boldly heckling William Thurston Brown, a speaker on Socialism from Portland, Oregon. Brown offered to answer questions and Miss Iasigi, in evening gown, arose and went at him.

"What would the poor do without the rich?" was her first question.

Brown made no audible reply.

"Would you refuse to be rich," asked the wealthy girl, "or do you know any poor who would refuse to be rich if they had a chance?"

Brown seemed too surprised to answer.

"Are we not all seeking wealth or its equivalent?" continued the fair catechiser.

But Brown declined to answer. John W. Kohlsaat, the rich New Yorker, was present. He smiled at Miss Iasigi. So did Walter Pritchard Eaton, dramatic critic and magazine writer.

DORCAS SNODGRASS MAY BE IN THE WEST

Missing Mt. Vernon Society Girl Not on Steamship Reaching London.

NEW YORK, July 27.—The cabled dispatch from London today stating that Miss Dorcas Ijams Snodgrass, the missing Mt. Vernon society girl, was not aboard the steamship President Lincoln, gave the hunt to locate her a new turn tonight, when the police announced they had information which indicated that Miss Snodgrass had gone West. The Mt. Vernon police have been notified that a girl answering the description of Miss Snodgrass has been seen in Cleveland.

The report from London was a denial of the rumor that Miss Snodgrass might have eloped with Dr. Norman Smith, formerly surgeon at the hospital where she was a nurse. Dr. Smith sent this message from the President Lincoln by wireless.

"Miss Snodgrass not with me aboard the President Lincoln and I do not know anything about her."

The purser of the President Lincoln sent this message:

"Dr. Norman Smith is aboard the ship and is not accompanied by his wife. Miss Dorcas Snodgrass is not aboard."

Jordan's Mother to Ask Gov. Foss to Save Him

Pathetic Plea for Boy in Her First Interview

"Was Not Himself When He Did the Deed," Says Heart-broken Parent.

'DOES NOT DESERVE DEATH'

Governor Foss was told last night of the pathetic plea of Mrs. Mary E. Jordan that she be allowed to talk to the Governor on behalf of her son, Chester S. Jordan, now awaiting electrocution for the murder of his wife. The Governor was deeply interested in the plea of Mrs. Jordan that her son's life be saved, and readily granted the mother's request that she be allowed to visit the Governor. Mrs. Jordan also asked that the Governor himself visit Jordan in his cell. This the Governor agreed to do. He will send word to Mrs. Jordan this week when he will visit her son and when he will be glad to talk over the son's case with her.

OUT of the tragedy and suffering of the past four years of her life comes a pathetic appeal which Mrs. Mary E. Jordan of Somerville is to make to Governor Foss to spare the life of her son, Chester S. Jordan, who is doomed to die in the electric chair at Charlestown the week beginning September 22.

Mrs. Jordan told the story of her sorrow for the first time yesterday, when she talked with a Sunday AMERICAN reporter of the events that followed her son's slaying his wife on September 1, 1908. In her great grief the mother had kept silent. She intends to make her plea in person to Governor Foss at the State House whenever the Governor will consent to see her.

The heartbroken mother said she has hope her son, whose plea had been refused by the highest court in the country, may find mercy from the Governor and Council when they have heard her own story of his boyhood and the early years of his unhappy married life. For that reason she will tell the story to the Governor.

"I know my Chet better than any one else," declared the mother to the AMERICAN. "I know that he was not himself when he did this deed.

"Let his life be spared. Let me die before my son. I can't bear up much longer under this terrible strain.

"Sometimes it seems to me that I must die before the time fixed for his death. It will certainly kill me."

Mrs. Jordan is living out her sorrow-burdened days at No. 29 Highland road, Somerville. It was there that she was seen by an AMERICAN reporter. As she spoke, her voice shook with the pathos of her sufferings. This is her appeal of a mother for the life of her son.

By MRS. MARY E. JORDAN.

For four long years I've had this deep shadow before me. It seems so strange to me that Chet should be where he is.

Ten years ago, when we first came to Boston from Indianapolis, everything seemed so bright for us all.

Chet was getting along well. How happy he was to be here! And his future seemed so encouraging.

Now all has changed. These years that I have carried this sorrow seem so long. I really cannot get my mind on anything else. Day and night my boy is in my mind. Go where I will and have everything done for me to make me forget, but I cannot.

I keep thinking, thinking all the time why should I have this sorrow?

I think of his happy childhood days in Indianapolis, and I can see him playing around the house in my mind—those days when all my children were small.

Oh, how good Chet was to me! How kind he has always been to me. Everyone thought so well of him. He was kind to everyone. Why, at one time when he was a very small boy, he was very fond of pets. If he saw a stray dog running around the streets he wanted to bring it home. Then he would have guinea pigs, rabbits and other pets about the house.

He was never cruel, but loved every animal, and would go out of his way to help anyone. You know that I have been thinking about what he did as a little boy ever since this trouble came to him.

I can remember him so well as a baby. How he clung to me and never wanted me to leave him in those tender years! He seemed to be loving and considerate of me always.

Anything that would please mother was always in his mind. So many things come to me when he was a little older. He would come to the kitchen and ask me to let him wash the dishes or wipe them.

MRS. JORDAN, MOTHER OF CHESTER

MRS MARY E JORDAN

First published studio photograph of the woman who will plead with Governor Foss to save her son, condemned as wife-slayer, from paying the penalty of his crime in the electric chair.

Married Life Not Happy.

Oh! so many little things come up now! I have watched him grow into manhood. With this devotion to me, I never saw him lose his temper. Often I wondered that he did not. Many a time he has had much to upset him. Then, when all this trouble came to him, I said this is not like Chet. He is not as cruel as that.

I really could not believe it all. It staggered me. I knew his married life was not a happy one. But I'm a mother and even after he was married I tried to make the best of his choice.

When he came to me and spoke about it, I could not help but say a restraining word to him about marrying, because his choice was so much older, ten years older than himself.

But mothers can only do so much. While they love their children and will do everything for them, they often cannot make them consider their best interests.

Chet's married life was unhappy. He made a mistake, and though I never heard Chet say anything against his wife, yet I knew he was miserable. It is hard for a man to come home and find no supper and be forced to get his own meals. Then to hear constantly certain things, which he tried to deny, but the evidence for them was too strong. Yet he lived in the midst of family storms.

They came and departed. After three years of married life, and eager to shield the mistake he made, he kept still and said very little to me.

Opposed Wife Going on Stage.

But his unhappiness was seen in his face. He would often come to me and I knew something was on his mind. I would ask him, "What's the matter with you, Chet? You do not seem to be like yourself." But he never said anything, but kept up his worried look.

His wife told me once, that if he did a certain thing she would take his heart out. Everything in his family life was annoying him. I did hope that changes would come. But she became more nervous. It was hard for him to sit still.

His wife wanted to go back to the stage. He did not want her to do that. He was willing to do everything for her. But her habits bothered him.

I am only saying these things, because my boy, whom I know better than any one else, did not know what he was doing, when he committed the act for which he is to suffer.

I know what he passed through in his family life.

I have passed through it all these past four years thinking of my boy. No one knows what I have suffered for him. But I feel that Chet was impulsive and did something that he was maddened to do. He was in such a condition, on account of the long strain of trying to improve his wife, that it wore him out. I am not saying this to justify his acts, but I do believe that he did not know what he was doing.

"Should Not Go to Chair."

He wanted to do everything for his wife and for nearly four years he tried. He made his mistake when she wanted to go back to the stage. He should have consented and then this present trouble would not have taken place. The cause was his trying to make a change and then getting discouraged.

But I have thought this matter all over carefully. It has been on my mind for so long. I believe that my boy should not go to the chair. He should be punished for what he has done. But to be punished in the way that he is going to be punished should be changed. I feel that boy did not know what he was doing. He was so good and kind to me. He was this to every one. He was this to his wife.

All during these years I have suffered with my boy. I have felt this more than anyone else. The ends of justice will be served just as well to commute his sentence to life imprisonment. There are certain particulars that I know about my boy. I want Governor Foss to know them. Just as soon as the Governor will see me I want to just talk with him. It will do me good to see him. I do not know how long I shall live, but I cannot bear to think of the coming of September. So many will be happy then, and then I am obliged to think of what is coming to my Chet.

It seems sometime that I must die before the time fixed for his death. It will certainly kill me.

I am feeling for him. I know my Chet better than anyone else, and I know that he was not himself when he did this deed.

Let us spare his life. Let me die before my son. I can't bear up much longer under this terrible strain.

GOVERNOR FOSS HAS BUSY EDITORIAL DAY

corporation and its employes, but it exemplifies the fact that any dispute, in a public service corportion especially, ought to be submitted to arbitration.

Such corporations serve the public. They are under the most rigid obligations to render a satisfactory public service, and not to permit that service to deteriorate or be interrupted except for causes beyond their control.

I hope to see the principle of arbitration extended in Massachusetts until strikes and lockouts become things of the past.

Public authority cannot "take sides" in a controversy of this kind. It can only see that the laws of the Commonwealth are obeyed, in letter and in spirit.

It is this impartial character of public arbitration that makes it potentially of the greatest value to both employers and employes, whether a public service corporation or some private business enterprise is concerned.

Arbitration and mutual understanding are the best known preventives of controversy and conflict. It is a public duty to broaden their scope until they become the recognized and universal means of reconciliation and peace.

Before the Governor hurried away to Fort Warren he was a keen follower of the events of the day as the reporters told about them. He did not care to say anything about the Bull Moose meeting or the Red Bandanna party. But the Governor-Editor said:

Another thing we ought to say something about in the Sunday AMERICAN is the Workmen's Compensation Act.

It seems to me that in creating that legislation Massachusetts has placed herself definitely in the lead on a vitally important movement. Let us tell the people all about it.

Work Well Under Way.

During the present year an Industrial Accident Board has been organized by the State to carry out the provisions of this act. The board is now established. Its work is well under way. The benefit which it will bring to Massachusetts is abundantly demonstrated.

I regard the establishment of this act, and the Industrial Accident Board, as the most important step in advance which Massachusetts has taken for years.

Massachusetts may well be proud that she is the leader in this movement. The principal of workingmen's compensation for injuries cannot become fully effective until it is universally applied throughout the civilized world. Therefore it should be a source of pride to every Massachusetts citizen that public officials and investigators from all sections of the country are studying the Massachusetts method, coming here to watch its operation and carrying away valuable information to apply in other States.

Far-Reaching Results.

It is not too much to say that the application of this principle that a workingman is entitled to immediate compensation, paid without lawsuits, for injuries received at his work, will change the whole aspect of American industry and remove one of the most fertile causes of discontent and destitution in all industrial callings.

With many things calling him away to be Governor, the Governor-Editor might have continued to discuss the "big things" if Walter Coughlan of Charlestown hadn't come flying back from the composing room again to say that "the man says he'll have to have those proofs in two minutes."

"Does he?" asked the Governor-Editor, "does he? Well, well, well! Sit right down, my boy, and I will get busy."

But Walter thought he had better stand, and you will observe that the photographer caught him there, standing.

ELUSIVE KID M'COY HELD WITHOUT BAIL

Belgian Legation Makes No Move to Help Release of the Former American Pugilist.

LONDON, July 27.—Kid McCoy, the elusive, was today refused bail and is in jail here, charged with implication in the robbery of jewels from a Russian Princess at the Grand Palace Hotel, Ostend. The Princess says the stolen jewels are valued at $80,000; the Kid says $8,000 would cover the loss.

The Kid and his counsel tried hard in Bow Street Police Court today to secure freedom on the plea that he had no connection with the robbery, but the magistrate remanded him until he had heard the particulars of the charge which have not arrived here. McCoy can only be released with the consent of the Belgian Legation which has yet made no offer to assist the one-time champion American boxer.

Scotland Yard men admit the only evidence they have against McCoy thus far is the fact that he was seen in company of the persons suspected of really making the haul. Those in America who know this former pugilist, saloon keeper, automobile dealer, road-house boniface, many-times-wedded young man, will not consider it strange that he should be seen in company of thieves nor would they be surprised to hear that he walked down Piccadilly arm in arm with a lord or a duke.

McCoy the Elusive.

McCoy has the reputation of being able to scent a dollar or its equivalent from afar, yet this is the first time he has ever been accused of downright burglary. The money that has passed through his hands since the day in 1904 that he won the middleweight title from Tommy Ryan would amount to several fortunes if McCoy could gather it together again and have it counted. But the Kid never carried fly paper in his change pocket.

Dispatches from Ostend, the Belgian watering place, say that McCoy is not believed to be connected with the robbery, as there is no direct evidence against him, and his room there was not on the same floor as that of the Princess who was robbed.

Ostend Investigation.

The Ostend investigation shows that Kid McCoy stopped at the Palace Hotel last Sunday and Monday when the robbery occurred. While there he associated with three men and a woman, who have been arrested. One of the arrested men is named Kent; the other two are father and son named Faldin. The whole party arrived in Ostend on Sunday. Kent took a room next to the Princess' apartment, while the two Faldins asked for a room next to Kent's. Monday morning, after the Princess had left her apartment, her room was entered and jewels to the value of $8,000 taken.

The arrest of the thieves was effected owing to the fact that the woman drank heavily and talked too much. Kid McCoy left Ostend Monday, on the 9 o'clock boat and was followed to London by the Belgian detectives.

It now transpires that the Princess, whose jewels were taken is not the American girl, Miss Nicolls, who was the wife of General Gerald Fitzgerald, and who claims to have married the Prince of Thurn and Taxis, but is the wife of Albert, reigning Prince of Thurn and Taxis, and is related to Emperor Joseph of Austria.

GIRL FALLS FROM ROOF.

Skull Fractured in Thirty-Foot Drop at Haverhill.

HAVERHILL, July 27.—Olive Mountain, aged sixteen, a resident of Prince Edward Island, is dying at the Hale Hospital from injuries received in falling thirty feet. She was spending her vacation with her aunt, Mrs. William Clatts of Welcome street. This afternoon she washed her head and sat on the roof in the sun with her hair down. She leaned against the rail which broke and fell to the ground. Her skull is fractured.

PLAN KOSHER MEETING.

Malden Meat Strikers Will Get Ready to Open Shop.

Malden kosher meat strikers will hold a meeting tonight in Foresters' Hall, Bryant street, when plans are to be completed for the opening of a co-operative store on Monday in Suffolk square. Already, the strikers say they have a fund of more than $4,000. Mrs. Annie Finkelstein, president of the striking Malden women, said: "Despite the lack of leadership, we are better organized here than ever. Believe the Chelsea women will also hold out."

MISS M'DONNELL, OF ALLSTON, TO BE BRIDE THIS WEEK

CATHERINE McDONNELL

CHILD KILLED BY CAR.

PITTSFIELD, July 27.—William Fitch, Jr., aged three years, was instantly killed early this evening by a trolley car. The child ran in front of the car, which was descending the steep grade of Linden street. He was the son of William Fitch of No. 105 Dewey avenue, and was colored. His mother saw the accident and fainted. Medical Examiner Colt exonerated Motorman David Donovan.

HADLEY-M'DONNELL WEDDING THURSDAY

Conservatory Girl, Noted as Dancer, to Be Bride of Samuel H. Hadley, New York.

Friends of Miss Katherine McDonnell, daughter of Mrs. Miles B. McDonnell of the Ivanhoe, Allston, received a bit of a surprise yesterday when announcement was made that Miss McDonnell is to be married next Thursday to Samuel Hopkins Hadley of New York city.

Though the friendship between Miss McDonnell and Mr. Hadley has been known to her acquaintances, no formal announcement of an engagement had been made. News of the wedding for this week make Miss McDonnell's friends realize that she had been keeping her plans to herself quite successfully.

The wedding will take place at Mrs. McDonnell's Summer home at Lakewood, town of Madison, Me. The bride will be attended by her only sister, Miss Francis McDonnell. After an extended wedding trip the couple will live in New York city, where Mr. Hadley has large business interests. Miss McDonnell will be among the youngest matrons in New York society.

Mrs. Martin Hays of Allston, who is Mrs. McDonnell's house guest for the month, will remain for the wedding.

Miss McDonnell is well known in Boston and New York where her specialty dancing has brought her prominently before the public. She and her sisters have been honor students at the New England Conservatory since their arrival in Boston some few years ago. Several special pantomimic sketches have been written for them by the faculty of the Conservatory, among the most prominent "The Death of Night."

SEE VICTORY AHEAD FOR THE TWO-BATTLESHIP PROGRAM IN NEW DEMOCRATIC MOVE

House Members Signing Petitions for New Caucus to Rescind Action of One Declaring Against Increase in Navy

Sulzer and Curley Ask Immediate Action; Republicans Plan to Force Open Vote; Eager for Credit of Winning

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The fight for two battleships at this session of Congress has been won, is the firm conviction of Democratic members of the House, who are signing petitions for a new caucus to rescind the action of the previous caucus declaring against any battleships.

A strong statement urging the House conferees to yield also is being circulated. Some Democrats are still working on the members to heal the split caused by division on the battleship policy in Democratic ranks. To this end they are advocating delays for a couple of weeks in the holding of the next caucus so they can obtain a compromise agreement on one battleship and harmonious action.

Representatives Sulzer and Curley, who are fighting for two battleships, oppose this program of delay and are pressing for an immediate caucus, having now many more than the necessary twenty-five signatures to their petitions.

Committee Stays Out.

Chairman Padgett of the Committee on Naval Affairs and one of the conferees on the disagreeing votes of the House and Senate on battleship authorization, will take no part in the House factional fight on two battleships and the holding of a new caucus. No conferences have been held with the managers on the navy bill, because the Senators have announced their determination to hold out for battleship authorization.

From every section of the country telegrams of congratulation on their fight are pouring in on Sulzer and Curley. Many of these telegrams are from leading Democrats, condemning caucus action as in conflict with the Baltimore platform declaration and un-American.

On account of the large number of Democrats who are in favor of two ships, the Republicans, led by Representative Foss of Illinois, will press for an open vote on the subject in the House.

There is every indication now that the Republicans, by thus taking the initiative, will get the credit of winning the most important fight before Congress.

The Senate sees the situation and its possibilities for a Republican victory, and has decided to stand firm on the two ship program without compromise.

Demand for Adequate Navy.

Members of the House are hastening to put themselves on record in favor of an adequate navy. Here are the views of some of the members:

JOHN A. MARTIN of Colorado:

The caucus broke its back when, with nearly half of the entire Democratic membership absent, it only succeeded by a majority of eight of those present in tabling resolutions to release the membership from the no-battleship obligation of preceding caucuses. Such a close and indecisive result means that the caucus must and will recede. Personally I am in favor of caucus action that will release the membership from caucus rule and permit them to vote as they please. I believe the caucus action to be in violation of the Denver platform. I cannot abide the action of the caucus without violating my oath of office with respect to the national defence.

JOSEPH E. RANSDELL of Louisiana:

The House has no right to dictate to Congress what legislation shall be allowed to pass. I favor one battleship this year, and the Democratic caucus should at least agree to this compromise.

CARL HAYDEN of Arizona:

I attended my first Democratic caucus Wednesday evening and voted for battleships. I favor the building of at least one good battleship a year. I think any other course would be dangerous. We must maintain an adequate navy.

HARVEY B. FERGUSON, of New Mexico:

I favor two battleships. I believe the Democrats of the House favor the building of all the battleships necessary, and that they have taken their present position as a matter of expediency. If another caucus is held I believe the former actions will be rescinded.

GEORGE W. TAYLOR, of Alabama:

I have always favored and voted for a big navy. I want two battleships. I would like to see this government build four every year with all the necessary auxiliaries. I think the Senate should stand firm in its contention for two battleships. I think conditions demand that we build at least two powerful war vessels every year. The House will make a mistake if it persists in refusing to accept the Senate's amendment.

I. S. PEPPER, of Iowa:

The House Democrats seem to be getting ready to concede something to the Senate on the battleship proposition. They should do so. The House Democrats should not claim all the prerogatives in this important legislation.

JAMES T. M'DERMOTT, of Illinois:

House Democrats should do something on this battleship question. They cannot afford to stand out against the judgment of the Senate and the patriotic demands of the people for an adequate navy. I believe they will at least compromise. I am for an adequate navy whatever the demands may be.

IF WE NEGLECT NAVY MUST ABANDON CANAL, DECLARES ROOSEVELT

OYSTER BAY, July 27.—The following statement was issued by Theodore Roosevelt:

"When the Democrats vote down the battleships they should also vote, if they are logical, to abandon the Panama Canal.

"It is an understandable policy to abandon the canal, abandon building up the fleet and say that this nation shall simply become the China of the Western Hemisphere. I do not believe in that policy, but at least it is understandable. But the one unpardonable thing is to incur responsibility then decline to adopt the necessary means to enable us to meet that responsibility.

"It is an outrage from the standpoint of the national honor and interest to go on with the Panama Canal at all unless we both fortify it and keep up an adequate navy.

"Furthermore, any talk as to what we intend to do about the Monroe Doctrine, the Panama Canal, the protection of Hawaii or in any other matter is not merely offensive but contemptible, if we abandon building up the navy and show that we really have neither the power nor the will, if the need should ever come, to make our words good by deeds.

"Out in the cow country in the old days it used to be proverbial that the man who was most apt to get into trouble was the man who was always ready to draw but not to shoot. The man who never got into trouble was the man who never blustered, who never was offensive, who never wronged or insulted anyone, but who, as everybody well knew, was entirely competent to hold his own if attacked.

"I believe in the upbuilding of the United States Navy as an insurance for peace.

"The voyage of our battle fleet around the world was one of the greatest moves for peace that this country has ever made.

"I hope that our people will always act not only with scrupulous justice, but with the utmost generosity toward all other nations, weak and strong. I also hope that this will make it evident that such action is due not to timidity on our part, but to genuine love of justice; we will become impotent either to secure justice for others or to secure respect for ourselves if we abandon the upbuilding of the navy, for the minute we stop building up the navy the navy begins to go backward."

MAYOR HOWARD WAITING.

Brockton Executive in No Hurry About Third Term.

BROCKTON, July 27.—Mayor Howard of this city is more interested in the outcome of the coming national and State election than he is even in his own probable candidacy for a third term on the Republican ticket for mayor. At least, he says he will not make known his intentions in regard to a third term as mayor until after November 5. "It's a mighty big thing, this electing a President of the United States," said the mayor, "particularly this year."

ROOSEVELT PLEASED WITH MOOSE ADVICES

Cheered by Loyalty of Nassau Neighbors, and by Kansas Court Decision.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., July 27.—A rollicking herd of 100 Bull Moose workers of Freeport, L. I., wheeled up to Sagamore Hill in a string of automobiles today to shake Colonel Roosevelt's hand and vow eternal allegiance to the third party cause.

"If all they tell me is true," said the Colonel, after their departure, "I shall carry Nassau County 2 to 1. When I can reach the people it's all right. It's where the bosses try to stand in my way that we have any trouble. We won't have any in this county."

Roosevelt felt intensely pleased over advices from Kansas that the Supreme Court has decided in favor of allowing Roosevelt candidates to go upon the Republican ballot in the primaries next week, at which the elector candidates to run on the straight ticket next Fall will be named.

If Roosevelt's men win at the primaries they will be the straight electoral candidates. If Taft's men win, the Roosevelt electors will be obliged to run by petition upon a third ticket.

The Colonel quoted a telegram from William Allen White, the Kansas editor, dwelling up on the Supreme Court decision.

"Our Supreme Court victory for the Roosevelt electors has helped clear the situation in this State," wired White. "It is a ruling that the Roosevelt electors have the right to a place on the ballot in a Republican State in a Republican primary. Our Supreme Court is a strong court, and its decision will command respect the country over."

White went on to say that the Roosevelt men will have watchers at the polls on primary day "who will for the mere love of the cause, work to see that you get the majority vote."

The ex-President spoke of the sacrifice to the Kansas farmers to get out on primary day.

"I am more pleased than I can say."

George W. Sisson, president of the New York State Agricultural Fair, called to ask Roosevelt to speak at the fair at Syracuse, early in September. The Colonel promised to be there if he could arrange his speaking engagements.

MINORITY REPORT ON STEEL AHEAD OF ROOSEVELT VIEWS

WASHINGTON, July 27.—In order to show that Colonel Roosevelt was in no way responsible for the findings of the Republican members of the Steel Trust investigating committee, Representative Gardner announced to the House today that the report had gone to the public printer three years ago and yesterday afternoon was given to the press for further release.

"I make this statement," said Mr. Gardner, "for the reason that the views on the steel industry given out by Colonel Roosevelt last night singularly correspond in two respects with the conclusions of the minority. These two respects relate to the labor situation and to that part of the Stanley bill which deals with corporations which control over 30 per cent. of the domestic product of a given article. Of course, Colonel Roosevelt has made an error in confusing a rebuttable presumption of unreasonableness with an absolute prohibition in the case of corporations of that sort, but that is a mistake which any man might make on a superficial examination of the Stanley-Brandeis bill.

"I know that the world is censorious and I fear lest it might say that the minority of the Stanley Steel Committee had purloined the Colonel's views, if I were to neglect to point out that we gave our views to the press several hours earlier than the Colonel gave out his advance statement."

PROGRESSIVES OF WORCESTER WILL FIGHT A. M. TAFT

WORCESTER, July 27.—Progressive Republicans said here today that if former Senator Arthur M. Taft of this city should by any chance win the regular Republican nomination for Congress in the new Worcester district they will do everything in their power to elect a Democrat.

The withdrawal of Winfield S. Schuster of Douglas, the big woolen manufacturer, leaves the Republican leaders completely in the air. Mr. Schuster is a member of Governor Foss's Council.

Taft's record in the Massachusetts Senate is likely to be brought into the campaign to show him a reactionary of reactionaries.

WYOMING GOVERNOR CALLS FOR GENERAL BREAK FROM TAFT

CHEYENNE, Wyo., July 27.—Governor Carey called the Progressive convention to order today and made an address in which he urged the Progressives to adopt a platform declaring independence of the Taft Republican organization. "I do not believe that President Taft has a chance on earth of reelection unless Governor Wilson dies or Theodore Roosevelt gives up the great work he is championing," said Carey. The convention selected three delegates to the Chicago convention.

TAFT HAS HANFORD LETTER

Judge's Formal Resignation Received at White House.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The formal letter of resignation of Judge Cornelius Hanford of Seattle, Wash., was received at the White House today. President Taft, after reading the letter, which was brief and gave ill-health as the reason for resigning, filed it away for future reference. He will take no action in the matter until after the return of the congressional investigating committee from Seattle.

State Child Injured.

Marries His Grandniece.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., July 27.—Stephen Scott, seventy-five years old, a wealthy resident of Duchess County, has married his grandniece, Miss Alice See, twenty-two years old.

$5,000 PUT ON WILSON BY MAN WHO 'HASN'T LOST IN 20 YEARS'

CHICAGO, July 27.—The first important bet on the results of the national election was recorded when William Patch, a wealthy furniture dealer, posted $5,000 to bet on Governor Wilson against the field as even money. Bruce Wilson, a Chicago sporting man, took $1,500 and promised he would cover $500 more tomorrow. Mr. Patch only stipulated that Governor Wilson lives and runs for the presidency.

"I will bet any amount up to $10,000 that Wilson is the next President, whether Roosevelt runs or not," said Mr. Patch. "I haven't lost a bet on a presidential election in twenty years and I have bet on them all. I feel as sure of winning on Wilson as if I already had the money in my pocket."

QUINBY IS SILENT ON OLD AGE CHARGE

New Hampshire Ex-Governor, However, Still in Race for U. S. Senate

HAMPTON BEACH, N. H., July 27.—You couldn't move around Cutler's Hotel here today without stepping on the toes of a New Hampshire Old Guard Republican.

Among those present was former Governor Henry B. Quinby of Lakeport, candidate for the United States Senate to succeed Henry E. Burnham of Manchester.

The contest at present is between Governor Quinby and Publisher Rosecrans W. Pillsbury of the Manchester Union.

Colonel Pillsbury came out the other day in a letter which charged that the former Governor, who defeated Pillsbury four years ago for the gubernatorial nomination, "is too old to be given the Senatorship." The Pillsbury letter was signed by the Pillsbury Campaign Committee, and published in the Pillsbury newspaper.

Other members of the Old Guard commiserated with Governor Quinby here today. Some of them declared that the "boys" will find out that the Republican party cannot get along without the older men any more than it can get along without the youngsters.

Governor Quimby, however, would not discuss the charge that he is sixty-six years old.

"Have you prepared an answer to the Pillsbury Committee letter?" he was asked.

"No."

"Are you going to?"

"No."

"Will you send out any statement of any kind?"

"It is not my present intention."

Late in the afternoon the Governor left for his home at Lakeport.

GOVERNOR RAISES WAGES.

Men at Sturtevant Works Now on Overtime Basis.

The employes of the B. F. Sturtevant Blower Company, Readville, of which Governor Foss is the head, were made glad yesterday when an official notice was posted on the bulletin board in the shop stating that time-and-a-half would be paid the men for all overtime beginning with the 1st of August. The men had asked for increase over regular rates for working four nights a week. The matter was taken up by Roscoe L. Hall, president of Division No. 19 of the M. I. A. of M., with the result that an interview took place Friday morning at the State House with the Governor. The men say it is a victory for them.

IN BARE FEET, ARRESTED.

Yachtsman Guild Charged With Assaulting Policeman.

PORTSMOUTH, July 27.—William Guild, twenty-four, of Boston, who was a passenger on the racing sloop Early Dawn III., which was dismasted off the Maine coast and is now here for repairs, was arrested here today on a charge of assaulting Patrolman George Carleton. Guild was arrested first on a charge of appearing on the street in his bare feet and creating a disturbance. Today the police claim he fought Patrolman Carleton. Guild was then arrested a second time. He will be arraigned in court Monday.

HOSEMAN'S LEG BROKEN.

James Higgins Thrown from Wagon Responding to Alarm.

WILSON COMPLETING ACCEPTANCE SPEECH

Governor Emerges from His Retreat, but Quickly Goes Into Hiding Again.

SEAGIRT, N. J., July 27.—Governor Wilson has left his retreat, where he has been writing his speech of acceptance, but is still in hiding. He has sent word that he will return to the "Little White House" on Monday. In the meanwhile delegations and individuals with whom he had appointments have come and gone away disappointed.

It is expected that when Governor Wilson returns on Monday, his speech of acceptance will be completed and ready for dictation. The Governor has written shorthand for forty years, and has fallen into the habit of writing all his thoughts in stenographic notes. These he afterwards dictates to his stenographers. Preparations are being made here for a hurried job on the speech on Monday night. Printed copies should be ready for distribution by Tuesday or Wednesday.

On Tuesday Governor Wilson will go to Trenton. There he will attend to some official business, and in addition will hold conferences with United States Senator Smith of South Carolina, Lewis Nixon, the shipbuilder, J. Taylor Ellyson, Lieutenant-Governor of Virginia, and Congressman William C. Redfield of Brooklyn.

With Mr. Nixon, the Governor, it is understood, will discuss the subject of ship subsidy and of the recent action of the congressional Democratic caucus in turning down the program for more battleships.

Congressman Redfield is known as an expert on the tariff. Governor Wilson has frequently quoted him in his speeches. It is said that the purpose of Redfield's visit on Tuesday will be to go over Governor Wilson's speech of acceptance, so far as it relates to the tariff, and offer any suggestions that may occur to him.

Senator Smith is a member of the Senate Immigration Committee, and it is believed he will discuss the subject with the Governor.

FOSS PRAISES ARTILLERY.

Coast Volunteers Make Good Shots at Fort Warren.

Governor Foss reviewed the First Battalion, Coast Artillery corps, yesterday at Fort Warren and watched the volunteers fire some of the big guns at moving targets. Both batteries at the fort were manned, and both scored several fine shots in hitting the targets. Governor Foss complimented the militiamen on their excellent handling of the guns and their fine showing generally.

The regular officers acting as instructors while the Cape troops remain at Fort Warren on their tour of duty praised the volunteers for their excellent marksmanship. The battalion has a record at target practice and made good again yesterday.

The First battalion, Field Artillery, went to West Barnstable yesterday for its annual encampment, to practice on the grounds just vacated by the Eighth regiment, M. V. M. The target practice for the artillerymen begins tomorrow.

UNLOOKED-FOR EXPLOSION.

Torpedo Bursts During Practice on Vesuvius.

NEWPORT, July 27.—A practice torpedo, supposed to contain nothing more deadly than compressed air, exploded just after it had left the tube during experimental work on the torpedo boat Vesuvius a day or two ago, according to members of her crew, who told the story when the little craft returned here today. Had the torpedo exploded inside several men would have been killed.

The explosion was accompanied with a terrific report, and occurred just as the projectile struck the water. A huge column of spray and solid water was thrown high into the air and the little vessel rocked like a cockle shell in the wave which followed the accident. The torpedo, costing $5,000, was destroyed. Officers are at a loss to understand how one of their practice torpedoes can be loaded with an explosive. They also would like to know what the explosive was.

CITY RAISES PAY OF 50.

Fin. Com. Employes Among Those Who Get Increases.

More than fifty city employes benefit by increases of salary recommended by city department heads and approved by Mayor Fitzgerald yesterday. John C. L. Dowling, secretary and junior counsel of the Finance Commission, had his salary increased from $2,000 to $2,500 and Gertrude C. Bayley, the stenographer of the Commission, was advanced from $1,000 per year to $1,200. Ten increases were granted in the Health Department, and in the various branches of the Public Works Departments advances which will increase the payroll about $150 per week were authorized.

Benton Has One Plank We Agree On

The Colonel Thinks the Next Governor Will Be a Vermonter; and He Will!

Several things became known last night in connection with the aspirations of Colonel Everett C. Benton for the Republican nomination for Governor.

1.—Representative James F. Cavanagh, the tallest and handsomest Republican in Middlesex County, has accepted the chairmanship of the Benton Campaign Committee.

2.—Colonel Benton will not campaign in an office chair, but will go out and meet the voters. He has already shaken hands around through Middlesex, Essex, Suffolk and Worcester Counties.

3.—The colonel is a candidate because he is convinced, he says, that he can defeat Governor Foss and so keep a Vermonter in the chair.

4.—There will be no criticism by Colonel Benton of any candidate or candidates who may enter the race.

PLAYS AIRSHIP BASEBALL.

Arch Freeman Drops Five Balls to Lynn Players.

Fans at the New Bedford-Lynn game at Ocean Park, Lynn, in the New England League, yesterday afternoon, saw a bit of aerial ball-playing when Aviator Arch Freeman, in his aeroplane with a passenger 500 feet in the air, threw five baseballs to the ground. Two of these were caught by Catcher Delaney and Leftfielder Morris of the New Bedfords.

REMAIN IN THE PARTY URGES LA FOLLETTE

Wisconsin Senator Scores Roosevelt as One Time Ally of Reactionaries.

MADISON, Wis., July 27.—In a signed editorial in La Follette's Weekly, the Wisconsin Senator attacks Theodore Roosevelt as a one-time ally of reactionaries, and urges progressive Republicans to stay within the ranks of their own party. The editorial says:

"What is known as the progressive movement in American politics is originated within the Republican party. While special interests have been increasing their hold upon the administrative side of the government at Washington progressive Republicans in many stanch Republican States have wrested the control of government from these interests.

"The contest in many of the States was severe and protracted. Defeat was encountered again and again. While Roosevelt was presiding he offered no encouragement to the progressive Republicans who are struggling with the old machine bosses to enact direct primaries and other progressive statutes.

"His influence was openly on the side of the reactionaries.

"His appointees were the most active agents of the opposition.

Rival Dans Tell What They Would Do With Russell Money

Man Recognized by Russell Estate Tells How He Came to Enter Contest.

Says Fresno Dan: If I got the money—I'd get married, though I haven't got my eye on any girl in particular as yet. I'd settle in the West. I don't like the East, though I might come here occasionally. I want to travel, to see Europe and to live a life of ease and contentment. I don't want to work any more.

Says Dakota Dan: If I got the money—I'd settle among my folks in Melrose, erect a memorial building to my father, study law to whip the lawyers who fought my plans, head a brass band in a triumph parade, banquet my supporters and—perhaps run for Mayor of Melrose.

FRESNO DAN WANTS TO GET MARRIED AND TRAVEL AROUND THE WORLD

DAKOTA DAN WANTS TO BE A LAWYER AND RUN FOR MAYOR

By BERT FORD.

Here's your chance, girls!

Fresno Dan is looking for a wife.

He told a Sunday AMERICAN reporter so. Whether he gets a slice of the Russell fortune or not, he intends to marry, but he would prefer to launch on the sea of matrimony as the legally established heir to the late Senator Daniel Russell of Melrose.

He says he hasn't got his eye on any particular girl, but that he will accept the "first good one" that will have him. He tells how he has planned to live if he wins the celebrated will contest, "if there is anything left," and Dakota Dan also describes what he would do with the money.

The plans of the rival claimants are as different as they are themselves, and reflects in no small degree the respective types of the two men.

Dakota Dan says he will sell out his holdings in Dickinson, N. D., and settle among his folks in Melrose. If he gets a share of the Russell fortune he says he will build a combination public library and gymnasium in Melrose as a memorial to his father. He wants to study law with the hope that some time he might meet in legal combat in open court the lawyers who for three years have fought his claims.

Says Motive Is Unselfish.

In describing his air castles Fresno Dan makes public for the first time in detail in any official statement, in or out of court, just how he happened to enter his claim for a share of the estate in dispute.

He has briefly sketched his reason in his testimony at the East Cambridge court, but in the interview with the Sunday AMERICAN the former pedlar and fruit picker goes into greater detail.

The most striking feature of his narrative is that he was not prompted by a desire for a share of the half million left by his alleged father, but that he merely wished to save his alleged brother, William C. Russell, and the others in charge of the estate, from possible criminal prosecution, which he feared they were in danger of.

"Yes, I'm looking for a wife," began Fresno with a shy grin. "Got any special one in mind, you did ask? Nope! I've met girls East in my younger days and women in the West, but they never loved me that I could see. I've never been very strong with the women, though I like them well enough.

"Never quite understood the art of being popular. Guess I'm a trifle too bashful. Something like that. I'm no Apollo, you know. Course my life after leaving home was a roving one, and I couldn't think of settling down very well, but of late years my ideas have changed.

"I don't mind confessing that I would enjoy a home. Natural state, man realizes it the older he gets. Bachelorhood is a lonely game at times. Fellow wants companionship, especially of someone who would take an interest in him.

"So to be candid I'm sort of angling. What's that? Any of the women who attend court? Well, I might if there was a congenial one there, but I fancy I shall look elsewhere. May never meet one, but I'd like to. There was a time I thought I'd never marry. Most young men feel that way, I think. I used to look upon myself as a confirmed bachelor. Time works wonders.

"As to that question, what I would do if I get a share of the estate? I can't say accurately offhand. I'm not much of a hand to plan. Prefer to let things come. Besides this 'yar court wrangle may not be settled for five years to come. Begins to look this way. And there may not be any money left. That's what I fear.

"Reckon there's a good bit of the fortune gone now. May not be enough left to split. If I get any I hope it will be enough to keep me so that I shall not ever have to work again.

"I want to lead a life of leisure and pleasure. Always wanted to travel. When I put in my claim and started East I didn't think there would be any great trouble or fight to get my share. I thought I could get my money, a big enough bundle to go right to Europe and have a good time.

Seeks Trip in Europe.

"I wanted to see the sights in other countries—to see the people and customs and not to have to worry where the next dollar was coming from. That would be giving a wife the right kind of a time.

"I shall carry out this idea if I ever get this money. I'm going abroad before I die if I can. Then I would return and settle in the West. I think I would make my permanent home in California. I like California and its bracing climate. I like the scenes and people out that way.

"I suppose many might think because I was born in Melrose and lived there twenty-three years that I ought to have a lingering fondness for Boston and the East, but I've outgrown that. I like the West far better and about everybody who has gone out there feels the same way. I have better health and feel more at home on the coast."

Why He Left Home.

"Dakota Dan," said the writer, "claims in substance that he quarrelled with his father over his attentions to a woman who lived in the Russell house, that these attentions grieved his mother, and that as a result of the feud he left home. He said further that his mother gave him $50 when he went away. You testified that you had no quarrel with your father and that he gave you $100 when you went away. What was the real reason for your leaving home?"

"My reason is the right one," answered the man from Fresno quickly. "Of course I often had words with father. He was a peculiar man in many respects. He was high-tempered at times and wanted things done his way. But it was not as the result of a quarrel that I left home.

"I simply wanted to rove and see things. I wanted to be independent. When I left, father and I were on good terms. In drifting about I decided to change my name. With a father who had a standing and had been a senator I did not care to use the name of Russell. That's why I was known as John Anderson and Harry Johnson so long.

"I never served time. I never did anything I was ashamed of. I was arrested twice, as I testified, but for minor charges and was dismissed. I had hard knocks and saw life but am not a has-been yet.

"I am fifty years of age. Time for me to be thinking of a home and settling down, isn't it?"

First Heard of Case.

"I was busy in Fresno about the time this case was taking up the attention of the courts East. One day—it was February 21, 1911—I happened to pick up the Fresno Herald and my attention was attracted to a short item about a contest of the will of my father in Melrose. That article which Attorney Nason read in court told that some fraud was on and that an imposter was standing in my shoes.

"It said that somebody was likely to be jailed, and I didn't want anything to happen to my brother or the others. That was my first motive in deciding to make known my identity.

"Didn't I care anything about my half of the estate of a half million or more? Well, naturally. I liked the money and felt assured I would get enough to live happy and at ease the rest of my life. But the money was a secondary consideration. The rest you know, how I told a police inspector, placed my case in the hands of Attorney Carthwright of Fresno and came East with him.

"I don't care about automobiles or society frills. I am plain in my tastes. I like a good horse. I used to play the ponies and generally lost. I would buy a nice driving horse and live a quiet life. I would not live in Boston or Melrose if I get the money. My home would be in the West and I would come here occasionally. I would just travel and enjoy myself.

"I wouldn't take up any business. My hobby would be to just loaf and enjoy life."

Said Dakota Dan, between puffs of a stout cigar:

"What would I do with the money if I get it? Well the first thing I'd do would be to buy the old George Fuller estate on Main street, Melrose and erect a combination public library and gymnasium as a memorial to my father. I'd stand half and let the city stand the other half. I wouldn't care how much it cost. I'd do that for father's sake.

"Then I'd settle right down in Melrose among my people. I've been away from them long enough. I'd sell out all my holdings in North Dakota. Getting too old now for the ranch stunt, though I liked it while at it. How much do I own out that way? Well, a tract about six by four miles East and West and four miles North and South. No, it isn't mortgaged. Can't mortgage land out that way.

"I wouldn't care to travel. Travelled enough all my life. What I want now is to settle in my birthplace. I don't want any more of the West if I get my share.

"West is all right you understand. Got a lot of warm and valuable friends out that way. Fact is I've been away from North Dakota so long I'm afraid I'll have to engage counsel and identify myself out there when I go back for my wife.

"But I tell you what I do want to do. If ever I get that money which is mine by right of blood and law, I'll take a course in law and live in the hopes of meeting in open court some day in legal combat the lawyers who have been opposing my claims these three years back.

"I'll feast all those who have loyally stuck by me or they will me. They had everything ready for a blow-out the last trial if that judge hadn't decided against me. Perhaps my good friends in Melrose weren't sore. Made them crazy. But we'll win yet and when we do I'm going to turn out ahead of a procession with the town brass band and perhaps I'll run for mayor of Melrose."

To Overcome Sunburn, Tan, Freckles, Wrinkles

(From Outdoor Life.)

If you are freckled, tanned or sunburnt, dab a liberal amount of mercolized wax on the face and allow it to remain over night. When you wash off the wax in the morning, fine, flakey, almost invisible particles of cuticle come with it. Repeating this daily, the entire outer skin is absorbed, but so gradually, there's not the slightest hurt or inconvenience. Even the stubbornest freckles yield to this treatment. The underlying skin, which forms the new complexion, is so fresh and youthful-looking you'll marvel at the transformation. It's the only thing I know to actually discard an aged, faded, muddy or blotchy complexion. It is also good for arms, hands and neck. One ounce of mercolized wax, procurable at any drug store, is sufficient in most cases.

If sun and wind make you squint and frown, you're bound to cultivate wrinkles and crowsfeet. To overcome these, bathe the face in a solution made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel.

HAVEMEYER OPENS SUGAR TRUST WAR

Begins Fight In Revenge Because Name of Father Was Besmirched.

NEW YORK, July 27.—Horace Havemeyer, twenty-five years old, son of H. O. Havemeyer, creator of the Sugar Trust, has begun his promised fight on the great corporation in dead earnest. He has thrown down the gage of batle to the American Sugar Refining Company, and declares he is beginning the conflict in revenge because the trust besmirched the name of his father.

Young Havemeyer has formed a new sugar company to be known as Welch, Havemeyer & Fairchild. The character permits it to maintain and operate separate refineries and to deal in sugar refineries. He is being actively aided by his step-mother and his two sisters, Mrs. Peter H. B. Freylinghuysen (Miss Adeline Havemeyer) and Mrs. J. Watson Webb (Miss Electra Havemeyer). His bride, who was Miss Doris I. Dick, also is interested. A trade agreement has been entered into with the Arbuckle Company and the Spreckles interests, which control the Federal Sugar Refining Company.

With these immense interests behind him, young Hevemeyer feels strongly enough entrenched to give battle to the trust. Price cutting will be inaugurated, and, in order to obtain additional funds for the fight, Havemeyer has arranged to capitalize the sugar lands he owns in the Philippines and in the West for the use of the new concern.

BEATEN, ROBBED OF $10.

Joseph Reese Says He Was Clubbed Into Unconsciousness.

Joseph Reece, forty, living at No. 766 Western avenue, Lynn, was clubbed into unconsciousness and robbed of $10 by three men on Alley street, near Shepard street, Lynn, last night, according to a story he told the police. The police at once started a hunt for the assailants.

When the police found Reece, he was still dazed from the effects of a severe blow on the back of the head. At police headquarters, Reece revived and said he had been walking along Alley street. He noticed three men walking behind him, but not very closely.

Near the corner of Shepard street, declared Reece, the men ran up to him. One of them slugged him with a heavy bar or club, while the other two went through his pockets. [illegible] Reece was unable to furnish the police a good description of any one of the trio.

APPEAL TO POPE FOR PERU.

England to Ask Catholic Aid in Alleviating Conditions.

LONDON, July 27.—Great Britain will ask the aid of the Pope and the Catholic Church in alleviating conditions among the Peruvian Indians in the Putumayo Rubber Company.

In carrying out this plan the British Government will aid the extension of the Roman Catholic Church in that section of Peru. Overtures have been made to the Pope, and, if he is willing, efforts will be made to secure funds through popular subscription to extend Catholic missions among these Indians. The Peruvian government refuses to allow the operation of missionaries other than those of the Catholic Church.

Jumps Into Merrimac.

HAERHILL, July 27.—Melvin House, aged twenty-two, tried to drown himself in the Merrimac River to-night because his wife threatened to divorce him. He jumped off the Haverhill bridge. Eugene Walker, a fireman, heard the splash from the Crescent Boat Club, and saved House with a motor boat. The man was exhausted. He is at the City Hospital.

Summer Girls Give Leap Year Picnic

FALMOUTH HEIGHTS, July 27.—A novel leap year picnic was given by fourteen Summer guests for three lone Boston men at Long Pond. The fourteen girls managed the picnic, even acting as chauffeurs for the four motor cars that conveyed the three men who had been dressed up in feminine attire. At the pond the girl picnickers played baseball, defeating a strong team.

The three Boston men were showered with attention and were not permitted to take any active part in the arrangements. Scores of Summer visitors were attracted to the pond, after which swimming races were arranged by the girls in Vineyard Sound.

The girls in charge of the picnic were the Misses Gladys Woodward and Ruth Woodward, Worcester; the Misses Sally and Helen O'Day, West Roxbury; Miss Katherine Young, West Medford; Misses Barbara Holmes and Hazel Holmes, Belmont; Miss Doris Engstrom, Lexington; Miss May Driscoll, Roslindale; Miss Sophie Mayer, Hamilton, Ohio; Ruth and Helen Moakley, Ithaca.

The three male guests were Harold D. Borustein, William Murray and Henry McInerny, all of Boston. Jack Moakley, the Cornell coach, was in charge of the athletic arrangements.

Two Hurt at Fire; Baby at Hospital

Mrs. William Brislane of No. 6 Woodbury street, Roxbury, was seriously burned and her husband was slightly hurt early today when a lamp in their home overturned, setting fire to the house.

Mrs. Brislane's three-weeks-old child, John Joseph Brislane, was uninjured and was carried to the street. Mrs. Brislane was taken to the City Hospital for treatment, and the child was taken with her. The husband had his hand burned in attempting to put out the flames.

Ten persons in the tenement were aroused. The damage was slight.

MISS GOULD DENIES NOTE

Declares She Didn't Chide Pastor for "Old Maid" Talk.

(By Telegraph to the I. N. S.)

ROXBURY, N. Y., July 27.—"Your telegram received. Did not write letter to Rev. Huffner of Colorado."

Helen Miller Gould.

NEW YORK, July 27.—The above refers to the letter attributed to Miss Helen Gould, given out by the Rev. Mr. Huffner, of Grand Junction, Col., who still insists that he received it from her.

The letter was a reply to a sermon preached by Rev. Mr. Huffner, in which he severely criticised all bachelor maids, or unmarried women, and advocated their "exile to a barren island as waste humanity."

GRAND JUNCTION, Colo., July 27.—The Rev. E. V. Huffner was unembarrassed when shown a despatch stating that Miss Helen Gould of New York had flatly denied she had written him upon his attitude toward old maids.

"I haven't the letter now, it is true," he admitted. "I mailed it to my brother, who is pastor of a church in Chester, W. Va. I wanted him to reply to it for me. On Sunday he is going to preach on 'Love, Courtship and Marriage.'"

SEEKING FOR BODY OF MAN WHO FLED

Fugitive Leaps Off Pier When Chased by Crowd After a Fight.

Fred Johnson, Timothy Nelson and Wilford Hoggins, colored, of the steamship Quickstep, were arrested by the police of Station 7, East Boston, at 1:30 this morning, charged with assault and battery on John J. O'Connor of No. 178 Border street, East Boston.

It appears one of the men went up to O'Connor in Central square and the two got into an argument, resulting in O'Connor's getting a blow in the eye that necessitated his removal to the East Boston Relief Station. His eye was injured.

The assault was seen by a crowd of three or four hundred persons, who started after the assailant. He was joined by the two other colored men and all ran down the street, one of them jumping overboard from the wharf of the Boston Towboat Company. The police are searching for his body, as it is believed he is drowned.

BIG WARSHIP DAMAGED.

NEWPORT, July 27.—The battleship Mississippi while manoeuvring in Narragansett Bay last week, it became known today, blew off a throttle and what is known as a "worm," so badly incapacitating the big warship that Captain Maxwell decided to take her to Philadelphia for repairs. It is not expected that the Mississippi will be back this season.

Help the City to Prevent the Plague

The Boston Board of Health, through their official rat catcher, are doing their best to keep rats from the bubonic plague ports of Cuba and Porto Rico from getting ashore off the vessels which hail from there.

According to the reports in the newspapers, they are being captured and killed by traps and fumigation, but there is bound to be some escape, for it is next to impossible to get them all.

While the city authorities are doing their utmost to exterminate these rats, every citizen should be doing his part to make their work sure by killing the rats on his own premises.

If everyone will do his part, the danger will soon be over, for if any rat escapes on shore and meets his death it will remove the danger of his having a chance to mingle with other rats and spread the plague.

If the plague rats once get a start in Boston, they will find a most fertile field to spread in.

The buildings of the city are all infested with both rats and mice, and owners or occupants make no effort to get rid of them.

If they can only be brought to realize the danger they run by their inaction, they will get busy with a rush, for when the bubonic plague gets a foothold anywhere, it sweeps through that place like a conflagration.

One of the greatest obstacles to the plague is Martin's Rat Powder. By properly placing this powder in the runways of the rats, they will soon get it into their system and die.

This preparation drives them into the open, where they expire. Sold by druggists and department stores everywhere for 50c and $1.00; 5c and 10c extra by mail. Eleven different powders for other pests; name kind when ordering.

PELLETIER RENEWS COURT CRITICISM

Says in Bass Point Speech He Will Keep It Up, as Long as He Thinks It Necessary.

District Attorney Joseph C. Pelletier yesterday reiterated and enlarged on his criticism of certain judges of the lower courts because of the manner in which they dealt with cases growing out of the car strike. It was in his first speech as a candidate for Governor, made at the third annual dinner of the Everett Democratic City Committee at Bass Point.

Mayor Fitzgerald and David I. Walsh were absent. About forty loyal party members attended. Former Mayor Thomas J. Boynton of Everett was toastmaster.

The prosecutor for Suffolk County declared that when acting on the commission which investigated the lower courts, attention was called to a judge who used to discuss pending cases with the probation officer in his office, arrange sentences in advance, go into court, listen to part of the evidence and impose the very sentences fixed before court began.

Mr. Pelletier said he would have something to say later on about the lawyer who conferred with certain lower court judges and made suggestions about the disposition of strike cases. He declared he wouldn't retract a thing he said the other day, but explained the criticism was not directed at all judges or all courts. He said:

> I propose to criticise the courts just so long as it seems to me fair and proper. It is our bounden duty to do so when necessity demands. There was a time when our courts and judiciary were surrounded by a circle beyond which no man dared to tread. The President of our country is often criticised. Then why not our judges, if they provoke it by their attitude or conduct?
> I am no anarchist, as some have taken delight in classing me. Some judges may be honest so far as money is concerned, but be a menace in their mental attitude toward the community. It is this type I criticise. I stand for law and order and for the integrity of our courts and judges, but I believe the only way we can hope to protect the courts is boldly to criticise and openly discuss such courts or judges as tend to inflame the public mind by reason of unfair actions and decisions at a time when the city is disturbed by a strike.
> I referred only to those courts and judges whom the cap might fit. I have been careful not to refer to any particular cases or judges, although I could have given specific instances and names.
> After all, the lower courts are the people's courts. That is why the Legislature gave the right to appeal. It should not be forgotten that the masses look upon the lower courts as the representatives of the law-enforcing power of the State, and that the imposition of unwarranted sentences or the allegation of charges not justified by the facts will give the people the impression justice has run riot and they must look elsewhere than to the constituted authority of our judiciary for remedy and justice.
> I assure you, gentlemen, I am a candidate until the polls close, and no power but the hand of death will stop me. I intend to make the best, hardest and cleanest fight I know of, and I know that success will come. I will be proud to become the standard bearer of the Bay State.

ANOTHER GIRL SLAIN.

New York Police Have Crime Like Connors Killing.

NEW YORK, July 27.—A mystery which rivals that of little Julia Conners, murdered by Nathan Swartz, was called to the attention of the police this afternoon by the finding of the body of eight-year-old Maria Barbuto of No. 84 Union street, Brooklyn, floating in Buttermilk Channel. The little body, which was found by John Murphy, a boatman, was wrapped in pieces of sacking. The arms were bound to the sides and a handkerchief was thrust into the mouth. No marks could be seen on the body, but it was in such condition only an expert could tell if such marks existed. Mrs. Antonio Barbuto identified the body as that of her daughter, who disappeared July 24 when playing in the street.

Claude Allen Convicted.

WYTHEVILLE, Va., July 27.—Claude Allen, one of the Hillsville outlaws, today was convicted of murder in the first degree for killing Commonwealth's Attorney William M. Foster. At a former trial Allen was convicted of murder in the second degree for killing Judge Thornton L. Massie.

Young Society Beauties Adorn Montserrat Fair and Horse Show

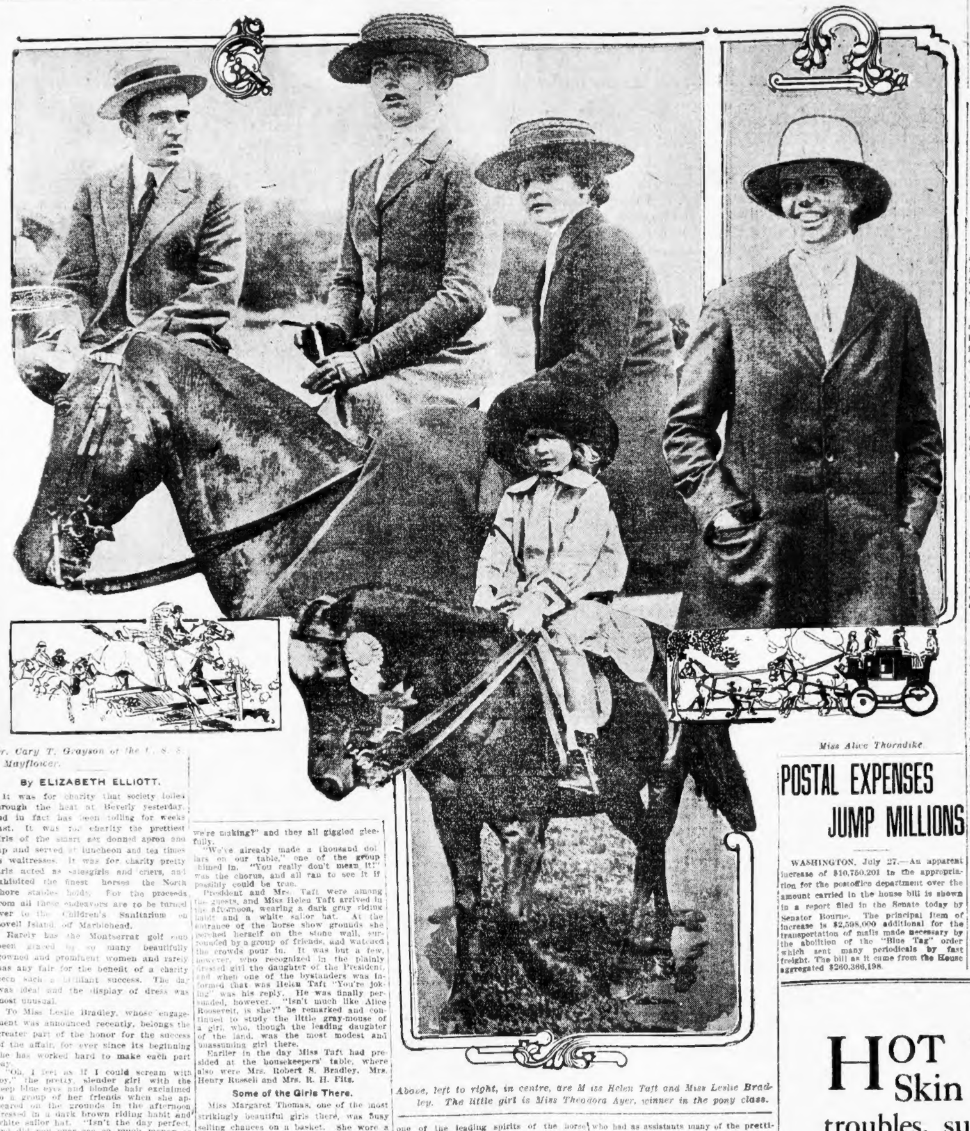
SOME OF THE THOROUGHBRED HORSES AND YOUNG WOMEN WHO SHOWED THEM YESTERDAY BEFORE SOCIETY THRONG AT MONTSERRAT.



Dr. Cary T. Grayson of the U. S. S. Mayflower.

Miss Alice Thorndike.

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

It was for charity that society toiled through the heat at Beverly yesterday, and in fact has been toiling for weeks past. It was for charity the prettiest girls of the smart set donned apron and cap and served at luncheon and tea times as waitresses. It was for charity pretty girls acted as salesgirls and criers, and exhibited the finest horses the North Shore stables hold. For the proceeds from all these endeavors are to be turned over to the Children's Sanitarium on Lovell Island, off Marblehead.

Rarely has the Montserrat golf club been graced by so many beautifully gowned and prominent women and rarely has any fair for the benefit of a charity been such a brilliant success. The day was ideal and the display of dress was most unusual.

To Miss Leslie Bradley, whose engagement was announced recently, belongs the greater part of the honor for the success of the affair, for ever since its beginning she has worked hard to make each part pay.

"Oh, I feel as if I could scream with joy," the pretty, slender girl with the deep blue eyes and blonde hair exclaimed to a group of her friends when she appeared on the grounds in the afternoon dressed in a dark brown riding habit and white sailor hat. "Isn't the day perfect, and did you ever see so much money as we're making?" and they all giggled gleefully.

"We've already made a thousand dollars on our table," one of the group chimed in. "You really don't mean it!" was the chorus, and all ran to see it if possibly could be true.

President and Mrs. Taft were among the guests, and Miss Helen Taft arrived in the afternoon, wearing a dark gray riding habit and a white sailor hat. At the entrance of the horse show grounds she perched herself on the stone wall, surrounded by a group of friends, and watched the crowds pour in. It was but a few, however, who recognized in the plainly dressed girl the daughter of the President, and when one of the bystanders was informed that was Helen Taft "You're joking" was his reply. He was finally persuaded, however. "Isn't much like Alice Roosevelt, is she?" he remarked and continued to study the little gray-mouse of a girl, who, though the leading daughter of the land, was the most modest and unassuming girl there.

Earlier in the day Miss Taft had presided at the housekeepers' table, where also were Mrs. Robert S. Bradley, Mrs. Henry Russell and Mrs. R. H. Fitz.

Some of the Girls There.

Miss Margaret Thomas, one of the most strikingly beautiful girls there, was busy selling chances on a basket. She wore a beautiful white embroidered gown and a large white hat faced with black velvet. At the horse show she wore a brown habit and sailor hat. The Misses Katherine and Rosamond Saltonstall, dressed alike in suits of pale blue linen trimmed with white lace, and large white lace hats trimmed with white chiffon and clusters of lavender flowers, were among the prettiest of the younger girls. During the afternoon the attendance of young George Meyer to Miss Rose was commented on by many.

Miss Alice Thorndike, who is surely the "nut-brown maid" this year, and who was one of the leading spirits of the horse show, wore a dark brown riding habit and a boat-shaped hat of black and white. She, with Mrs. George S. Mandell and Miss Mary Curtis, had the horse show in charge.

At the miscellaneous table was an especially pretty group of girls, and no wonder they were well patronized, for they were as charming and obliging as they were pretty. They were Miss Elizabeth Sars, who was in charge, the Misses Katherine and Rose Saltonstall, Miss Elizabeth Parker, Miss Grace Brooks, Miss Marion Lovering and Miss Elise Ames.

At the cake and candy tables were Mrs. C. E. Cotting, Mrs. H. G. O. Colby, Miss Cotting and Miss Newell.

Selling flowers and fruit were Mrs. Reginald C. Robbins, Mrs. John Caswell, Mrs. Dacre Bush and Mrs. Charles Ayer.

At the table where baskets and sachets were sold were Mrs. Neal Rantoul, Mrs. William Rantoul and Miss Franks.

Mrs. James H. Proctor, Miss Helen Frick, Miss Edith Fitz, Miss Minna Lyman, Miss Hilda Rice and Mrs. Frank Bemis looked after the interests of the children's table. At the booth for tables and books, Miss Margaret Thomas, Miss Catherine Foster, Miss Elsie Pollard and Miss Amy Peabody, presided.

At the fancy table were Miss May C. Burnham, Mrs. Lester Leland, Mrs. J. M. Jackson and Mrs. J. A. Burnham, Jr.

Along the Gay Midway.

One of the features was the midway, and it was the gayest and most attractive midway ever. It was in charge of Augustus Hemenway, one of the directors of the sanitarium. He worked hard in the interests of his cause. Among the wonderful attractions which he insisted everybody should see was a "dodger," a Zulu chief, in all the glory of war paint and feathers, and a fortune teller.

There was a soda fountain, and there Miss Rosamond Bradley, Miss Dorothy Ball and Miss Alice DeFer presided, but when they were rushed, their girl friends, growing impatient, declared they'd go in and mix their own drinks, and they did.

Luncheon and tea were served under the direction of Mrs. Randolph Tucker, who had as assistants many of the prettiest of the debutantes and younger girls. The tables were set on the club-house piazzas and under tents on the lawn. Bay trees and flowering plants were grouped about.

The Horse Show opened at 3 o'clock, and naturally was the star event. There were six classes, with large entries in each class. The judges were Hallam L. Movius of the Norfolk Hunt Club and Gerard Bement of the Myopia Hunt Club. Among those entered were T. W. Peirce, Mrs. Bryce Allan, Miss Alice Appleton, Richard Mortimer, Jr., Mrs. F. J. Alley, Miss Phyllis Sears, Miss Mary Curtis, Miss Helen Taft, M. M. Dimond, Miss A. Meyer, Miss J. Meyer, Mrs. George Burroughs, Miss A. Thorndike, C. G. Rice, S. P. Mandell, 2d, Miss E. Higginson, Miss N. Higginson, Miss E. M. Paine, Miss Elizabeth Cutting, Miss Ruth Cutting, John Caswell, Jr., Miss Clara Curtis, Miss Evelyn Curtis, Miss Margaret Thomas, Miss Amy Peabody, Miss Edith Fabyan, W. B. Miller, Miss Elaine Denegre, Miss Olivia Ames, Miss Elise Ames, Miss Hope Norman, D. H. Hostetter, R. S. Bradley, Miss E. P. Bigelow, Miss G. Stevens, G. S. Mandell, Miss Theodora Ayer.

Class 3, ponies in harness, not exceeding 12.2 and driven by children under sixteen—First, Preston Moore, driving Bubble; second, Miss Katherine Lane, driving Narina; third, E. L. Rantoul, driving Nellie; fourth, Lillian Hostetter, driving Bonnie Babe.

Class 4, hacks of thoroughbred type—First, Miss Alice Meyer, driving Leamington; second, Miss Mary Curtis, driving Typhoon; third, Richard Mortimer, Jr., driving Alice Earneal; fourth, Mrs. George Burroughs, driving Stafford. Miss Helen Taft failed to qualify in this class, notwithstanding that she drove Lady Warren in creditable style.

Class 5, pony jumpers, under 13 hands—First, C. G. Rice, riding Wrenn; second, Miss Annie Agassiz, riding Jack Rabbit; third, T. S. Mandell, riding Mahogany; fourth, Miss Alice Appleton, riding Headlight.

Class 6, jumpers and hunters, 15 hands and over—First, C. G. Rice, riding Woodside; second, F. H. Hostetter, riding Skidoo; third, Miss Mary Curtis, riding Red Wings; fourth Thomas S. Mandell, riding Third Mate.

AFTER DEATH

Death doesn't end the troubles of those who remain. After death comes the undertaker, in many cases a man who covers his greed with a face of sadness. He appears sympathetic, but he makes his charges all that those responsible for the funeral expenses can pay.

Few people complain at the outrageous prices charged for funerals. They pay the bills and say nothing. But later they realize that they have been victims of the hypocrite who forced large expenses upon them. My charges are known in advance. I render dignified, efficient service. I offer all the necessary equipment to give your loved one a fitting and proper burial, and at a price that will save you a large amount of money, soon to be needed for the battle of life. Read the following carefully:

GRAHAM SPECIAL $75 FUNERAL

Black broadcloth casket, trimmed, strong outside box, laying out, shaving, bathing and dressing remains, embalming, pedestals, rugs, chairs, floral piece or crepe for door, candlestick and candles when required, elegant hearse, two coaches, advertising death in newspaper, personal services in arranging and conducting funeral, with attendants, and use of our parlors.

This funeral duplicated by any other undertaker would cost at least $150.

NEW BEDFORD MILL MEN RENEW OFFER

Ask Strikers to Suggest Fair Substitute for Grading System That Caused Walkout.

NEW BEDFORD, July 27.—William O. Devoll, secretary of the Manufacturers' Association, today issued a statement reiterating the manufacturers' proposal made two weeks ago to deal with the strikers if they could suggest any better method of classifying cloth than the grading system now in vogue.

Tonight Secretary Duffy of the Weavers' Union issued a reply that the weavers will not abide by the grading system anyway and that they will keep up the strike for a month if necessary.

The strike has now been on two weeks. Fifteen thousand operatives are out. It has cost the strikers about $200,000, and the manufacturers about $100,000.

Mill Men's Statement.

The statement reads:

"The New Bedford Manufacturers' Association reiterates its offer of July 5 made to the weavers to confer with them if they could suggest any better method of classifying cloth than the grading system.

"Any charge made of unjust fining is a reflection against the honesty and manhood of the overseers of weaving. There is no justice in paying to the careless or indifferent weavers who do not stop their looms as much as the good weavers who are careful and quick to rectify any imperfection in the cloth. The majority of the weavers produce first-quality cloth. They are never paid second-quality prices and have no real objection to the grading system. Let those who object to the grading system seek employment elsewhere.

"Referring to Secretary Duffy's charge to the effect that short staples are used in the New Bedford mills, I would state that no mills are running less than 1⅛ to 1½-inch staples.

Denies Excessive Fines.

"In regard to the charges of excessive finings at the Dartmouth mills, the finings are nothing like $500 and $600, as alleged by Secretary Duffy. If the largest number of second quality prices were charged to the weavers, it would not equal half this sum, and the records for the last two weeks in which the grading system was employed shows that the amout of fines at this mill to be $20.06 and $16.54. The largest loss to the individual weaver is $1.27 and $1.14."

DEAD FROM CYANIDE.

Mystery Surrounds End of Man Found in Brookline.

The body of an unidentified man, believed to have committed suicide, was found yesterday afternoon in a shelter-house at Abbotswood Park, Brookline. Medical Examiner Leary said death was due to cyanide of potassium. The man was forty-eight years old, six feet tall, weighed 180 pounds, was of light complexion, with light brown hair, and a brown mustache. He wore new overalls, a black soft felt hat, black shoes and tan socks.

HURT CHASING A HAT.

Boy Helping One Motorist Hit by Another at Revere.

Henry Klasish, sixteen years old, of No. 11 Cotting street, West End, was hurt severely yesterday by an automobile when chasing a hat on the Revere Beach boulevard. The automobile was owned by Ralph Richardson of Lynn. Klasish was taken to the Massachusetts General Hospital, suffering from bruises and a compound fracture of the left arm. The youth was trying to recover a hat which had blown from the head of a passing motorist.

POSTAL EXPENSES JUMP MILLIONS

WASHINGTON, July 27.—An apparent increase of $10,750,201 in the appropriation for the postoffice department over the amount carried in the house bill is shown in a report filed in the Senate today by Senator Bourne. The principal item of increase is $2,598,000 additional for the transportation of mails made necessary by the abolition of the "Blue Tag" order which sent many periodicals by fast freight. The bill as it came from the House aggregated $260,366,198.

HOT Weather Skin and Scalp troubles, such as heat rashes, itchings, irritations, chafings, redness, pimples, blackheads, greasy, grimy complexion, excessive perspiration, etc., are so comforted by a soothing, refreshing bath with

MRS. SULLY SUES TIFFANY FOR GEMS

"They Were Sold to Us by Her Agent in Good Faith," the Firm Replies.

NEW YORK, July 27.—The fact that Mrs. Emma Sully, wife of Daniel B. Sully, of cotton fame, is trying to regain jewels valued at $110,000, from Tiffany & Co. was made known in the Supreme Court.

The jewelry firm filed an answer explaining why it asks that Mrs. Sully's suit should be dismissed. The firm asserts that it purchased the jewels in question in good faith from a person representing himself as the duly accredited agent of Mrs. Sully, and that no attempt was made to regain the jewelry until after the lapse of time which stops recovery by the statute of limitations.

The jewels in question, which Mrs. Sully charges were turned over to Tiffany without her knowledge or consent, include the following: One marquise diamond ring, one diamond crescent, one diamond bow knot, one diamond necklace, one emerald diamond, one pearl pendant, one emerald and diamond pendant.

Failed to Redeem Them

The [illegible] on November 29, 1904, Richard B. Comstock, then in control of this jewelry, came to them representing himself as agent of Mrs. Sully, and sold to the firm the [illegible].

The firm made a written agreement with him to [illegible] repurchase the jewelry at the same price within twelve months [illegible] was never acted upon.

About [illegible] Tiffany explained [illegible] court and [illegible] charge [illegible] $110,000 [illegible] During the [illegible] jewels [illegible] that Mr. S[illegible] transferred [illegible] of his property [illegible] creditors [illegible] she [illegible] property to the trustees [illegible]

Say Mrs. Sully Knew Facts.

The Tiffanys declare that Mrs. Sully had knowledge [illegible] in fear that she would [illegible] the property alleged to have been fraudulently transferred to her, she gave to Richard B. Comstock certain properties and moneys to be used by him in purchasing for her certain claims against Mr. Sully, her husband.

Among the items of property turned over to Comstock, the Tiffanys claim, were the jewels which are the [illegible] of the present suit. Comstock hypothecated them with the Tiffanys, it is charged, with the knowledge and consent of Mrs. Sully.

The option to repurchase the jewels expired on November 29, 1905. As the present action was not brought until about six years later, the firm contends that the action is barred by the statute of limitations.

MIDDLEBORO, July 27.—The fire district tax for the year will be $2.30 per thousand. It was $1.60 last year.

PIMPLES RED, LARGE AND DISFIGURING

So Ashamed Did Not Go Out. In Night's Time Full of Them. Cured by Cuticura Soap and Ointment.

287 Watkins St., Brooklyn, N. Y.—"When I was sixteen years of age, I noticed blackheads coming out on my face, then pimples, all kinds. I was so ashamed of myself that I did not go out of the house. In fact I did not want to show myself to my friends. Only the face was broken out and some parts of the hips. The pimples were red, large and disfiguring. Some came to a head and some came in big bumps; some were as large as a quarter and they were scattered all over my face in blotches. In a night's time my face was so full of them that I could not sleep on account of the itch.

"There was no cure. Medicines, salves, pills, nothing helped, until I saw about the Cuticura Soap and Ointment in the paper. I used them just as directions told me, and to my astonishment, I found a great change, and after a week or so, I was cured. My complexion is rosy and smooth instead of oily, rough and pimply as it used to be." (Signed) Albert Goldberg, Jan. 12, 1912.

For more than a generation Cuticura Soap and Ointment have been the favorites for the treatment of eczemas, rashes, itchings, irritations and other torturing, disfiguring humors of the skin and scalp. Sold everywhere. Sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

The Ideal Boston Policeman

Youngest Captain Gives Views

Capt. Goode of Back Bay Says Duty, First of All, Is to Prevent Crime.

The modern, up-to-date police officer must combine intellect with strength.

It is not necessary for him to be a physical giant. A keen, quick acting brain, one which can cope readily with a difficult problem, is better than brawn.

Briefly, the police officer of today realizes that his greatest duty is to prevent crime and not catch an offender when some crime is committed.—Thomas F. Goode, Boston's youngest and newest police captain.

A young man, rather slightly built and who would [illegible] secretary to a bank president, is in command of the Back Bay police station.

This man is Captain Thomas F. Goode, who attained his [illegible] days ago after serving in the department a little more than sixteen years. He has the distinction of being the youngest captain in the department and also the honor of being appointed to the place in the shortest period of service of any man on the force at the present day.

At police headquarters they have a sort of "Who's Who," but it tells but little about a man that would interest the public. Captain Goode doesn't like to be interviewed. "I am not used to this sort of thing," was his answer to a rapid fire of questions.

Terror to Vagrants.

He was appointed on the force in October, 1895. He served for three months at the Joy street station in the West end and was then sent to Roxbury Crossing.

Three years' service in that station found him a special detail officer. In 1901 he was assigned to police headquarters and for four years did plain clothes duty.

"I was known as the hobo and hurdy gurdy man," confessed Captain Goode, after many questions.

"In less than four years I arrested 700 vagrants and listened to more than that number of hurdy gurdies. It was my duty to rid the city of vagrants.

"I had been a piano tuner and my superiors at headquarters thought it would make a good man to rid the city of hurdy gurdies that were not in tune. Between both jobs I learned human nature. I certainly saw the dark side of life, but it did me good. The extreme cases in connection with the vagrant work softened me, as it would any man.

"On New Year's eve, 1904, I received my appointment as sergeant. I was assigned to the Dudley street station. The following March I was sent to the station where I am now.

"In 1909 I was promoted to the rank of lieutenant. I think I may in all modesty say that my present rank was gained by hard work.

Product of Boston.

Captain Goode is but forty-two years old and a Boston boy from head to foot. He was born and reared in Roxbury. Among his playmates during his days at the old Sherwin Grammar school, four have made good, like myself. Among these are Fred H. Emery of the Excise Commission, Judge Cohen of the Roxbury court, and the two Glover boys. The Glover boys are in the manufacturing business in Gloversville, N. Y. The town, in fact, got its name from them.

"Do you propose to make any radical changes in your department?" he was asked.

"No," he replied. "In fact I am too new at this place to discuss that phase of the business. I have, of course, my ideas about how a police officer should conduct himself, and intend to cultivate that same idea into the minds of my associates here.

"A police officer today is really a walking information bureau. He must be bright, keen, and have a discerning eye and mind. It is the duty of a police officer to help a man keep out of jail by advising him along right lines. Take in the case of a youth who is inclined to go bad. Perhaps his home surroundings are not of the best and he gets into bad company. The police officer should make it his business to talk to this boy and advise him. Even if the boy drops back into the old rut once or twice the officer should not get discouraged. That boy must certainly have some human element that will respond to kindness."

Education in Debate.

Captain Goode said that he has always been interested in law and government.

"I used to start arguments among the men in the station in order to make them and myself think quick. It is surprising to see the good results obtained from this method. Naturally a man wants to meet his fellow on equal terms in an argument on some topic. It acts as an incentive for him to read. He thinks quicker and becomes more intelligent. Now you can understand how it helps a man when he is performing his duty as a police officer. In any crisis he is not apt to lose his head. He can size up the situation instantly.

"It is the little things in this business that counts. Supposing a stranger steps up to a crossing officer and asks some question. The policeman should answer with a smile and even volunteer further information if he is able. That brings about co-operation between the people and the men who protect their property.

"Now if a good fellow who has been imbibing kicks over an ash barrel, just make him set the barrel up again and then send him on his way home. Very few will do the trick a second time.

"What would happen, though, if such an offender was arrested? He would laugh at the law.

"But I am talking too much. So long."

BAILEY PASSES IN TEXAS BALLOTING

Voters Choose S[illegible] to Senator Who No[illegible] State's Id[illegible]

AUSTIN, Tex., July 27.—[illegible] hundred thousand Texas Democrats, in [illegible] marched to the polls today [illegible] candidate for the United S[illegible] to name their choice [illegible] doesn't make much diff[illegible] Republicans do, inasmuch as the Texas Democrats outnumber them at least five to one.

This day is another [illegible] retirement of Joseph Weld[illegible] the public life of the Unit[illegible] one of the United St[illegible] chose to follow the flesh[illegible] to the pastures of plenty [illegible] get the people who made them.

The rivals in today's [illegible] senatorship are Congressman M[illegible] Sheppard of Texarkana, thirty-seven years old, Congressman Choice Boswell [illegible] of Sherman, fifty-five years old, and J. F. Wolters.

Bitter Fight for Place.

Governor Oscar Branch Colquitt of Terrell is also up today for renomination. W. I. Ramsey, an associate justice of the Supreme Court, is the [illegible].

The fight for Bailey's [illegible] senate has been very bitter [illegible] are apt to be in Texas. There w[illegible] no great surprise if the telephone brings news, later in the day, that here and there this bitterness has culminated [illegible] encounters.

Otherwise, the tragedy in the historical proceedings of this day in Texas lies in the retirement of "Joe" Bailey in the full bloom of his robust manh[illegible] at a time when all the world [illegible] him as the most eloquent of present [illegible] Americans.

Bailey is only forty-nine. [illegible] he rivalled William Jennings Bryan [illegible] a radical of radicals. Then [illegible]

When He Really Quit.

When this wonderfully gifted man [illegible] it be known in September of last year that he was ready to quit, and that he would not be a candidate for a third term in the Senate at Washington, it was only because he had read the handwriting on the wall.

Bailey's resignation was really written at El Paso four years ago by William Randolph Hearst.

The Hearst newspapers had been saying some sharp things about Bailey. The charges were so grave Mr. Hearst saw fit to come into Texas and make them in person before Texans.

Mr. Hearst read a letter from Senator "Joe" Bailey to Henry Clay Pierce of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company—the Standard Oil subsidiary in Texas—asking for the prompt remittance of $1,750. Then there was Bailey's $8,000 note to Pierce, and a letter from John D. Archbold to "Joe" Sibley asking that Bailey be brought to No. 26 Broadway.

Charges had been made against Bailey before that, but none so grave as these. And Bailey had won every fight. He had appealed to the people of Texas, and handsome, eloquent as no other Texan is eloquent, the people had declared their faith in their Senator.

Ever since that night in 1908, however, even the novice in Texan politics has been able to see that "Joe" Bailey was done.

Bailey's first election to the Senate—he had already been ten years in the House—meant the retirement of an old-time Democratic leader, Horace Chilton.

The young Texan at that time was still believed to be the kind of radical Democrat that Texans want. He broke with Bryan, who has a way of breaking with his friends, and the Bryanites turned against him. Then the progressives got after him, and, finally—added to the Chiltonites, the Bryanites and the progressives—the men-out-of-office-and-anxious-to-get-in lined up on the anti-Bailey end.

All of them together couldn't have sent "Joe" Bailey to the tall grass at the age of forty-nine, however, without the assistance of "Joe" Bailey himself.

And His Day Was Done.

Texas loved him. Texas stood for him as a "conservative" Democrat. Texas didn't shy at him as a "high tariff" Democrat. But when Bailey was brought into the open, when he turned out to be an Aldrich Democrat, a Standard Oil Democrat, a Lumber Trust Democrat, and finally a Lorimer Democrat, his day was done.

When Bailey retired from the Senate he merely signed his name to the papers prepared for him by William Randolph Hearst in the Hearst exposure of Bailey at El Paso. The belief prevails hereabouts that Bailey will become a member of a New York law firm.

Congressman Morris Sheppard, prominent in the fight for Bailey's place, went to the House at Washington at the age of twenty-seven to succeed his father, the late Congressman John L. Sheppard of Texarkana. The young Congressman is one of the leading officers of the Woodmen of the World, one of the largest fraternal insurance orders in the United States.

Miss Hooper, Society Playwright, a Bride

Former Radcliffe Girl Weds W. M. Eastman of New York at Walpole, N. H.

Guests from Boston, Cambridge, New York, Brooklyn and St. Louis attended the wedding at Walpole, N. H., last evening of Miss Rebecca Lane Hooper, Radcliffe, '03, daughter of Professor and Mrs. Franklyn W. Hooper of Brooklyn, to William Franklyn Eastman of New York, formerly of Melrose. Following the wedding was a reception at Walpole [illegible].

The bride is president of the Women's University Club of New York, and is noted as a college and society playwright. Several plays and operettas of her writing, in collaboration with Miss Mabel Daniels of Brookline, the composer and her classmate, were produced at Radcliffe and also by the Vincent Club of this city.

The wedding took place in the Walpole Unitarian Church. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Samuel Maxwell of Greenfield, formerly of Walpole, assisted by the Rev. Emile Aimar, pastor of the Walpole church.

The bride was attended by Miss Daniels. Nathaniel Brown of Portland, brother-in-law of the bridegroom, was best man. The ushers were Franklin Dana Hooper of Brooklyn, brother of the bride; Louis Fary of London, England, Barnard Powers, Powell Crichton and William H. Thompson of New York and Julius V. Clark of Boston.

Everett Tewksbury of Boston was at the organ, with William Grafing King of Brooklyn, as violinist. Among the bridal music was an organ composition by Porter Steele of New York and a "Romanza" by Miss Daniels, composed for the occasion.

BEVERIDGE MAY RUN.

Talk of Ex-Senator as Governorship Candidate.

INDIANAPOLIS, July 27.—Albert J. Beveridge, former United States Senator and leader of the Progressive party in Indiana, will head the third party ticket in this State. Beveridge will be nominated for the governorship at the coming third party State convention Thursday. This is the belief of the leaders of the party here, who have received thousands of letters and telegrams from various parts of the State urging his nomination.

BLOODHOUNDS LEAD HUNT FOR MAINE SLAYER

Posses Scour Woods for Man Who Struck Down 14-Year-Old Naomi Mitchell.

TAKE UP TRAIL TO SWAMP.

Giant Fugitive Expert in Dodging Through Thicket; Victim Buried.

CARMEL, Me., July 27.—Bloodhounds are on the track of the man who murdered fourteen-year-old Naomi Mitchell. The man is believed to be Jasper Sherman Gray, a farmhand giant whose mind is said to be unbalanced. It is believed the man will be run down before many hours.

The two trained hounds reached here from the prison at Thomaston today. They were received by Sheriff T. H. White. One of the dogs was taken to the scene of the crime and [illegible] by the groceries of the little girl which were found scattered about.

The [illegible] took the trail and bounded toward the woods. He followed the scent for some time and then apparently lost it.

The men in charge of the animal then took it to another section of the woods and turned him loose.

[illegible] on the trail of [illegible]

Will Scour Woods

[illegible] Sheriff White was arranging to throw a [illegible] of a hundred men into the woods tomorrow and beat thoroughly every section of it for miles beyond North Carmel.

The search is being concentrated on a swamp known as the Etna bog. It stretches [illegible] of Etna to Carmel [illegible] and [illegible] is a most [illegible] to penetrate.

Gray is a born woodsman [illegible] squirm through a thicket [illegible] with [illegible] general belief [illegible] way into a recess of the bog and is [illegible] there. His [illegible] must [illegible] be [illegible].

That section of [illegible] abounds in huckleberries, blackberries and raspberries. There is water in the swamp. It is believed that the man will soon tire of this subsistence and make himself known.

Should he hear the [illegible] of the hounds the general belief is that he will be in a hurry to give himself up. [illegible] been much [illegible] ferocity of the [illegible] and Gray knows well the danger of [illegible] his trial.

Got Sight of Fugitive.

Only one man, so far as is known, has seen Gray since he disappeared. He is Edgar Robinson, who knows him. Robinson saw him a mile and a half from Carmel. He came out of the woods on the Hampden road near the [illegible] farm, looked about eagerly and then caught sight of Robinson. He darted back into the woods.

Irving Call and Bert Brown raced into the woods in search of the fugitive. They could not find him. Deputy Sheriff Garland, in charge of a squad of searchers who needed sleep tonight, was told to go home by farmers who are searching for Gray.

"You go on home," said one of the armed men. "If we find Gray we will take care of him all right."

The victim of the insane and fiendish attack was buried today. Her mother is seriously ill with a newly born babe at her side. Her father, almost crazed with grief, would wreak vengeance on the murderer if he got his hands on him.

"I would give ten years of my life," said the father, "to lay hands on the murderer."

MISS ANDREWS' PARTY.

Will be Introduced to Newport Society Monday Evening.

NEWPORT, R. I., July 27.—Mr. and Mrs. Paul A. Andrews have sent out many invitations to the coming-out party of their daughter, Miss Margaret E. Andrews, on Monday evening. It will take place at Rockry Hall, which recently has been rebuilt at an expense of more than $50,000. Mrs. Andrews and Miss Andrews will receive in the large hall. A dinner will follow in the oak room.

"HORSE TROT" AT NEWPORT

Latest Fad in Dances Brought There by Washington Man.

NEWPORT, July 27.—The "Horse Trot" is the latest dancing fad of Newport, and was brought here by Uriel Davis of Washington, who composed it. A party of young people, headed by Preston Gibson, surprised Mrs. Sidney Jones Colford with the dance.

Unionist Wins Seat.

LONDON, July 27.—H. C. Craig, a Unionist, was elected to the House of Commons from Crewe in today's election.

WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH NEWPORT!

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, who ought to know, says that there's nothing the matter, that the women have simply asserted themselves and taken a hand in more vital things, and as a result the saloons are closed, there is no gambling, no Sunday dancing, and monkey dinners are things of a forgotten age.

MRS. O. H. P. BELMONT AT THE SCENE OF HER NEWPORT ACTIVITIES

Mrs. Belmont—a pen and ink sketch by Artist Stevens

Mrs. Belmont at her desk in the office of the Newport suffragettes.

"But" Adds Mrs. Belmont, "American Women Are Hopelessly Lacking in Pride, and I'm Thorougly Ashamed of Them. The Highest Aim for All Women Is Independence."

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

THE lid is on at Newport. It's been banged down good and hard, and Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Miss Thomas and Miss Ellen Mason, besides a few others equally prominent, are sitting on it. They are—I know, because I saw them.

It really is very, very terrible what has happened to Newport. Just think—the saloons have been closed, gambling has been stopped, Sunday dancing has been declared off, there's a ban on the Grizzly Bear and the Turkey Trot and there are to be no more monkey dinners.

Poor monkeys! It really seems too bad!

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont—she of the social prestige, the inclinations suffrageward, the many, many millions and the Marble Palace at Newport—is by many looked upon as the social leader of the country, so [illegible] she would be the one best [illegible] the problem, "What's the Matter with Newport?" It was to her I went for information. I went to Newport and to the Marble Palace.

She was not in, so I went next to the cunning little place on one of the busiest of the business streets, tucked in among all sorts of other buildings—the new suffrage headquarters which Mrs. Belmont opened there last week.

It's such a comfy little place with all sorts of books and magazines on suffrage and [illegible] tea is served every afternoon—for ten cents.

After waiting some time, Mrs. Belmont finally appeared. She spends much time there each day. After we had talked a few moments about suffrage and a number of other things, I blurted out, a little behind schedule time, for I had meant to ask that question first, "What's the matter with Newport?"

"[illegible] do you mean?" she smiled back [illegible].

"Why, where is all the gayety which [illegible] here in other years, why are the saloons being closed, the Sunday morning dances being abolished and the monkey dinners no more?"

"That's easily answered. It's because the women are becoming interested in bigger and more vital things than monkey dinners and the like and are doing themselves the things which they have previously depended upon men to do for them, and which were never done. If we look far enough into things we will see that suffrage is the cause of it all and a better and saner city the result. It is really the women who have done the things."

"What is your ambition as a suffragette?" I questioned.

"My one and greatest ambition," she promptly replied, "is to arouse pride in the American woman. That's the whole trouble—she is so hopelessly lacking in pride.

"Isn't it lack of pride which makes her content to work side by side and shoulder to shoulder with men every day in the week, doing the same work and doing it better but content to draw half the salary which they draw? Isn't it lack of pride which makes her content to be treated as a child and an imbecile? You know the only people who can't vote are convicts, children and women. Isn't it lack of pride [illegible] her content to be classed with these?"

"But don't you think the highest sphere for a woman is in the home?"

"No, indeed, the highest aim for all women is independence. Too many women are without pride, and for that reason unable to do for themselves, prefer to depend upon others to do for them what if [illegible] more independence and pride they [illegible] do for themselves ten times better. Women like these were [illegible] to marry in order that they might have some one to care for [illegible] they might have a home. That is the one main reason for so many unhappy marriages. A woman without sufficient pride to urge her on to do her best simply gets along the best she can until some man appears on the scene who is attracted by her and is willing to marry her and give her a home. She is no more capable of being a successful wife than she is of being a successful bread winner. She is too utterly lacking in pride to make an effort to do either well. She is willing to put up with abuse and all that makes an unhappy marriage, just for the sake of having a home and to evade the necessity of earning her own living. Just so in the larger home—the world, she is content to take what man is willing to give her,

Titled Salome New Broadway Sensation

LONDON, July 27.—With the departure of Oscar Hammerstein on the Lusitania today for New York, the secret of the new "Salome" dancer on Broadway [illegible]. The new dancer is Lady Constance Stewart Richardson, daughter of the Earl of Cromartie and kin to many a noble house in England and Scotland.

Lady Constance, who has appeared in New York and Newport as the interpreter of classic dances, is to dance at the Victoria Theatre in New York next month. There had been a great deal of mystery about the identity of the new Salome Broadway was to see. Lady Constance is the accomplished but unconventional young woman who has danced for charity on many occasions. Now she becomes a full fledged professional for the first time. The production in which she is to appear is staged by Reinhardt, the great German producer.

MIKKLESEN HEARD FROM.

Explorer Safe After Adventurous Trip Across Greenland.

COPENHAGEN, July 27.—Captain Ejnar Mikklesen, the Arctic explorer who was feared to have been lost in Greenland, is safe after having made an adventurous trip clear across Greenland, according to private advices received today. Captain Mikklesen started for Greenland to search for the bodies of the men of the lost Errichsen expedition and to endeavor to recover valuable data which that expedition was reported to have cached shortly before death overtook its members. Mikklesen started from Cape Bismark with one companion in 1910.

WANT A GIRL? CALL MR. 'EDDIE' MOORE!

Solving the servant girl problem is a cinch, says Eddie Moore, confidential secretary to Mayor Fitzgerald.

In less than half an hour yesterday, Mr. Moore found a satisfactory solution of the problem which has puzzled and is yet puzzling many a shrewd housewife. Mr. Moore hired a servant girl for the Fitzgerald home at Falmouth and is ready to guarantee she will please.

When Colonel Field of the Mayor's office got orders yesterday to get a servant girl and put her on the train for Falmouth within an hour he was perplexed. As Dick conveyed the message to Squire Moore there was genuine sympathy expressed over the difficult task that was cut out for the genial secretary from Charlestown.

Moore accepted the commission and while he refuses to state where he got the satisfactory domestic he was back at City Hall within the prescribed sixty minutes and the girl on the way to Falmouth.

Lest there be any doubt that Eddie accomplished the feat he says he is prepared to duplicate it for those who have been troubled in the selection of a suitable maid-of-all-work.

The regular Fitzgerald domestics are on their vacations and for that reason the substitute was necessary.

TO SUCCEED GENERAL HALL

Colonel Andrews Will Probably Be Made Adjutant General.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Colonel George Andrews, according to plans, probably will be nominated by President Taft to succeed Brigadier William P. Hall, retired, as adjutant general of the Army.

ENOUGH OF NEWPORT, DECLARES MRS. FISH

NEWPORT, July 27.—Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, dictator of fashion and social pacemaker, is tired of the dull routine of Newport life. She made this announcement today at the Casino. In her apparently impromptu address she startled her wealthy friends by declaring she was about to leave Newport.

"I want to tell you all, dear friends," she said as the throng gathered about her on the front veranda of the Casino, "that I'm not fascinated with Newport any more.

"Mr. Fish and myself will leave August 17 and may go to Europe.

"You see it is this way with us. There are the same old luncheons, the same old dinners, the same old dances; but I can't say the same old faces, though."

There had [illegible] that Mr. and Mrs. Fish were [illegible] kind of social duties here [illegible] and the rumors were well founded. But her utterance made a sensation [illegible] the talk of Newport.

"Oh, don't go away, dear Mrs. Fish," half a dozen of her friends who appreciated what the declaration meant, pleaded with her. But she only smiled in reply. She gave all to understand that her decision was final.

In the little circle which stood near Mrs. Fish as she renounced the resort of fashion were Mrs. Herman Oelrichs, Mrs. Pembroke Jones, Mrs. Royal Phelps Carroll and Miss Lola Robinson. Others whose names are as conspicuous also were there.

It is believed the [illegible] that culminated in Mrs. Fish's statement today began when she asked her guests at a recent party to quit dancing before midnight on a Saturday night so as not to desecrate the Sabbath. They quit, but many of them, it was reported, went to another cottage near by and continued their merry making.

BIGGEST MEN IN BOSTON SEE PROSPEROUS TIMES AHEAD

American Reporters Interview Representative Leaders in Finance, Transportation and Wholesale and Retail Trade

They Agree That Nobody is Frightened Now by the Old Bogie of "Presidntial Year," and Era of Prosperity to Come

From All Parts of the Country Comes News of Sustained Trade Revival—Crops Promise Better Than Ever Before

AMERICAN reporters who interviewed representative Boston leaders in finance, transportation and wholesale and retail trade, report almost identical stories of optimism. Business is good and [illegible] growing better.

The big men of Boston see prosperous times just ahead.

They agree that nobody is frightened any more by the old bogie "Presidential year." [illegible] barring prejudical tariff legislation, which they do not look for, and unless something happens to the crops, which now promise to break all records and tax the capacity of the railroads as it has never been taxed before, an era of prosperity such as the United States has never known before is about to be ushered in.

The consensus of opinion appears to be:

General business continues to improve.

From all parts of the country comes news of sustained trade revival.

The United States is so prosperous that nobody has any fear of the political campaign.

There is every indication that the crops are going to turn out better than ever; if this should be so, the country is in for a period of very good times. An immense amount of new wealth will be created as a result of the coming harvest.

Conditions in the labor market appear to be more settled. There have been fewer strikes.

How the business situation appears to Boston was described as follows:

WILLIAM A. GASTON, President Shawmut National Bank:

A prediction in the future of business and industry in the United States requires certain things to be assumed. If the harvests go to fruition with their present splendid prospects, the legislation in reference to tariff and business is sound, [illegible] reasonable, I look for an extension of our trade and business which will bring a prosperity and social extension not seen by us for many a long year.

PHILIP STOCKTON, President of the Old Colony Trust:

I am an optimist on [illegible] future, but a state of [illegible] is dependent upon the existence of numerous conditions. I hope and expect that tariff revision [illegible] accomplished in a just and [illegible] when crops are as plentiful [illegible] bid fair to be, labor's unrest will pass away and shortly [illegible] proceed to manufacture [illegible] goods in such quantities [illegible] perity will return [illegible] seen in years. [illegible] goods in the hands [illegible] customer ask [illegible] tion for future business activity.

P. F. SULLIVAN, President Bay State Street Railway Company:

The fundamentals of business are sound. Previous to 1907 there was a period of over-expansion. Since then we have been husbanding our resources so that today we have plenty of money to take care of our needs and our requirements; crops are good, better than the average for six years. Capital has been marking time, but conditions are changing and capital will take care of all reasonable business requirements. Why should there be a doubt? It is largely political and so long as politics continue to make capital its football, everybody will suffer, capital, labor and the country. If we a" pull together business will be good and this I confidently expect.

C. W. BARRON, president of the Boston News Bureau:

[illegible]

JOSEPH B. RUSSELL, president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce:

[illegible] have reached me [illegible] prospects are very encouraging [illegible] Boston [illegible] city [illegible] ever [illegible]

PRESIDENT CHARLES H. JONES of the Commonwealth Shoe & Leather Company:

It seems [illegible] is every reason to expect a large volume of business this Fall. On account of a steadily advancing market no dealers are [illegible] a healthy demand for goods for immediate use. The shoe factories [illegible] have taken large [illegible] this coming season. I see no reason why the presidential campaign should interfere with business. People have [illegible] buying for speculation [illegible] now buying from hand to mouth. We are going to have a good season.

P. P. O'CONNOR, President Retail Merchants' Board.

The business outlook is excellent. Boston is certainly commercially alive. The many improvements going on in this city and the many more to come indicate that [illegible] from my own point of view I cannot help but be optimistic about the Fall trading, and even further I cannot fail but be hopeful of the business of the coming year.

We have recovered from the blight of election years. While in the past something was made out of this, business is [illegible] too settled in its development to be disturbed by it to any great extent.

[illegible] trade is good all through in the different branches. I have no illusion to be anything else but satisfied with my own business and its success. When we have the international meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, as we do this Fall, and other meetings of representative bodies, we shall be the more convinced of our activities in trade and what a growing centre of business this city is becoming.

WILLIAM F. FITZGERALD, of Fitzgerald, Hubbard & Co., Bankers:

The answer to your question, with my present views, requires enthusiasm. I am one of those interested both as a manufacturer and banker, who believe that business lethargy has almost disappeared and that [illegible] of a magnitude, almost [illegible] will soon revive the United States [illegible] assume and [illegible] needful business laws and [illegible] will only be given [illegible] catastrophe [illegible]

GUY W. CURRIER, Esq., counsel for textile interests:

[illegible] are sound [illegible] we are [illegible] of great expansion [illegible] depends on [illegible] for national [illegible] be very [illegible]

ALANSON BIGELOW, of Bigelow, Kennard & Co., Jewelers:

We [illegible] first greatly [illegible] our store facilities.

Everyone here [illegible] optimism and enthusiasm over [illegible] trade outlook and I [illegible] confidence will not be misplaced.

HENRY M. THOMPSON, of Potter & Wrightington, Canned Goods and Cereals:

We are expecting that business will be good this Fall. Business men are ignoring the [illegible] and are preparing for a prosperous season. In our trade the prospects are excellent for [illegible] business. The wheat [illegible] in the Northwest promises to be better than it has been for years and the Southwest will produce better than an average crop. All things considered, I think that we will have a prosperous Fall and Winter.

D. CURRIE DOLEMAN, Andrew J. Lloyd & Company, optical goods:

Andrew J. Lloyd & Company are anticipating a greatly increased business from now on. We are greatly increasing our facilities in this anticipation and do not doubt that it will be realized.

We have contracted for the erection of a new five-story Lloyd building on the corner of Boylston street and the new extension of Arlington street as an earnest of our confidence in the future, and have in other ways [illegible] preparation for a greatly increased business.

As a matter of fact [illegible] is [illegible] at present. The photographic department particularly, started well last Spring and has [illegible]

JEROME JONES, Jones, McDuffee & Stratton, china and glassware:

Business will [illegible] this Fall. There is every reason to expect trade [illegible]

OAKES AMES, American Pneumatic Service Company:

SIMON HECHT, of the wool firm of Hecht, Liebmann & Co., 280 Summer street.

[illegible] Presidential [illegible] Wilson and Taft are agreed that [illegible] the tariff is not to be [illegible] and this means [illegible] business [illegible] we have had [illegible] years now [illegible] so we must [illegible] a good year as a change [illegible] Business is better [illegible] The whole outlook is [illegible] of Congress [illegible] things would be really [illegible] for Congress. Not only [illegible] to have things hustling [illegible] Then again, money is [illegible] Borrowers can do business [illegible] at four and a half. The batteries for the Norfolks were Wall and Hazelton and for the Holbrooks Simmons and Connolly. An address was made by David I. Walsh of Fitchburg.

Great Annual Event to Be Held in Charles River Basin on August 10.

Who is the best girl swimmer of New England?

The Boston AMERICAN'S second annual swimming match for the girl championship of New England will be held in the Charles River Basin on Saturday afternoon, August 10, at 2.30.

The championship was won last year by sixteen-year-old Marion Gibson of Dorchester, one of the Tenean Beach swimmers.

Seventy-five thousand cheering spectators saw this sixteen-year-old wonder come in first in a field of twenty-five starters.

MONKEY DANCES YIELD TO SERIOUS THINGS

"Why should a woman marry for a home or for money any more than a man? There is no more excuse for her doing it than for him. I certainly should tell my son to make his own way and not to hang onto any woman for support and protection. Why then should I tell my daughter who is in every way his equal to hang onto some man?"

"But don't you think the happiest, best thing for a woman is marriage?"

Better Than Marriage

"No, indeed, the best thing for her is independence. She must learn to stand on her own feet, then if the right man comes along and she is sure he is the right man, it is all right for her to marry, but marriage is by no means the only way for happiness."

But if suffrage is THE thing why isn't it more generally approved?

"There are some people who object so strongly to progressing themselves that they hate to see others progress for fear they may have to make an effort to keep up. This same class of people made a strong kick against the higher education for women. But hasn't it been the proper thing? Aren't women better wives and mothers and citizens for having higher education? These same people are averse to suffrage as they were to higher education, simply because they don't know any better.

"The higher type of man as well as the higher type of woman agrees it's the thing and that it makes better wives and better mothers and will eventually make a better country.

"The American women are more lacking in pride than any women in the world. I'm ashamed of the American women and particularly of the Eastern women who are so slow to recognize their divine right and are so lacking in pride and independence that they are content to be treated as men choose to treat them." Here I smiled, not at what she said but at the earnestness and [illegible] with which she said it. "Not understanding," she said with more emphasis than ever. "It's no laughing matter—it's sad [illegible] such conditions should exist. Other countries are far more progressive than America and the West far more progressive than the East. The Western woman is born with pride and a big, free idea of independence which she is allowed to exercise. But the Eastern woman has been dependent and driven so long that she is afraid to awaken and demand her rights."

"If women were mixed up in politics wouldn't that mean that they would neglect their homes?"

"Not any more than a man neglects his business for politics. If she sees to it, as she will, that the streets are kept clean and that the pure food laws are endorsed and the hundred and one things along the same line she is doing a bigger and broader work which takes little of her time and naturally embraces the home and is a strong factor in the happiness and health of that home.

Home Not the Only Sphere.

"As I said before I am ashamed of the women content to depend upon some one else to do for her the things which she could do twice as well herself. It's because the women of other countries have pride and spirit that they have suffrage. Just remember this, the home is not the only sphere for women by any means. Pride, independence and character first and if marriage comes then all right."

"Do you think that if a girl were earning a good salary it would be wise for her to give up her position and marry some man who might be earning less and for whom she might think she cared?"

"No, indeed, that girl should keep on earning. Hanging onto some one else for support and maintenance is the job of a weakling. In many instances it's because women are cowards that they marry, just as it is that they are cowards to go on content with conditions as they are."

"Then your watchwords to the women of America would be pride, independence and courage?" I suggested.

"By all means—those three qualities would make the American woman ideal."

"And there's really nothing the matter with Newport except that its women are progressing?" I ventured again.

"That must be it," and with that I left her in the kindly hands of the photographer and prepared to make a further investigation of my own.

First to the Casino and then out to Bailey's Beach. They were all in for their morning dip. The majority wore black silk suits and sunbonnets. Surely Newport has reformed. Where are all the gaudy suits one hears so much of? They are there, but they're in the minority. And would you believe it, the Summer girls down there are actually taking care of their complexions, trying to ward off as best they may the too ardent caresses of old Sol. No more nut-brown maids for them, hence the sunbonnet. They look a wee mite queer with a bathing suit, but they're such pretty confections so dainty and bewitchingly becoming, that perhaps they are justified. Mrs. Arthur Scott Burden was there in quite the most conspicuous suit on the beach, a royal purple close-fitting silk with sunbonnet to match. The Countess Széchenyi was also there, but in a close-fitting suit of black silk with a dainty little black sunbonnet. Mrs. W. G. Low wore blue silk and Mrs. Craig Biddle furnished food for thought in a close-fitting suit of bright green silk. Mrs. [illegible] Lawrence [illegible] frisked [illegible] on the beach to all appearances absolutely heart-whole and fancy free.

Most Conspicuous Suit.

Quite the most conspicuous suit of all was that worn by Mrs. J. Gordon Douglas, a vari-colored Japanese affair with [illegible] red and tan combined in Japanese [illegible]

Oh yes, and they wear gloves at Newport when they go in bathing. Sunbonnets and gloves to [illegible] tan and freckles for Newport. The lily white maid is the latest cry and lily-white they all must be.

It's great fun they have. Naturally Constance Warren with her wonderful feats in swimming is missed. She's in Europe for the Summer and the beautiful Newport estate is closed. It has been whispered about down there that Connie was bundled off to Europe on account of a love affair of which her parents disapproved. Perhaps she was and then again perhaps she wasn't. But about the bathing—out into the water and into the canoes they clamber to be tossed about by the waves and finally dumped in a gay heap on the sands of the shore. Up again and out, more scrambling and more laughter. A swim to the raft, a brief rest there, a swim [illegible] out. [illegible] a bottle [illegible] cocktails are served. Shocking! All are warmed up. They dress, gather [illegible] the piazza [illegible] house [illegible] of gossip and then whizz away home for luncheon. Then after that a drive in the [illegible] perhaps a game of tennis [illegible] and perhaps a dance, and another day is safely over.

One thing the matter with Newport this year is the dearth of young people there. Edith [illegible] being feted to death. Miss Margaret Andrews, Miss Roberta Willard and Miss Constance Kane are a few of the most popular of the [illegible]

There are so many more girls than men, and that is one reason why life there is so lacking in interest for many. Herman Oelrichs is there and needless to say [illegible] Frederick H. Prince, Jr. [illegible] very popular, but [illegible] cares more for polo than society and so it goes.

Newport's all right, but the life [illegible] there's a dearth of amusement, dearth of men and consequently a dearth of romance. Outside of that it's all right.

DEWEY STILL COUNSEL

Acts for Annie Manley in Case Against Professor.

Former Judge Henry S. Dewey, though confined at Pierce Farm, is acting as counsel for Annie Manley, the colored plaintiff in the $50,000 breach of promise suit against Professor Phillip B. Marcou of Harvard, a motion on which will come up in Suffolk County next Tuesday.

Miss Manley appeared in the Suffolk Superior Court and showed Clerk Bellew a letter written by Judge Dewey giving advice as to how she had better proceed in fighting the motion for the dismissal of her exceptions.

The motion was filed several days ago by Professor Marcou's counsel. Miss Manley asked for a continuance. The court directed her to secure counsel and she said that she would do so.

She told Clerk Bellew that she had been out to see Judge Dewey and had talked the matter over with him. She stated that she was going to have the exception printed.

She showed a letter in which Judge Dewey directed her how to proceed. She was told that as the case came from Middlesex county she should go to that county and take whatever action she desired.

NOW THE MAYOR SAYS A MAN SHOULD MARRY

And, With Corcoran in Mind, Holds It Particularly True of School Committeemen.

It's all off for the single [illegible]

Mayor Fitzgerald last night joined hands with Governor Foss and others who are opposing bachelors for public office and in a redhot attack on School Committeeman Michael H. Corcoran, who criticised the Mayor's attitude on the superintendency, he advises that the South Boston member of the committee get married.

[illegible] married, rear a family as I have [illegible] become a good citizen,' says the Mayor.

[illegible] the Mayor calls Corcoran a [illegible]. This is the Mayor's statement:

Mr. Corcoran is a sorehead. He has been opposed to me politically. I have not interfered in the selection of a superintendent of schools one way or the other. Mr. Ellis waited upon me and asked what my position would be if the school committee found it necessary to increase the salary in order to get the right man. I told him that I would be ready to sign any reasonable increase in order that Boston might get the best man available for the position.

During all the time that I have been Mayor of the city of Boston when Mr. Brooks was superintendent of schools, I did not ask a single favor. I expect to occupy the same position with Mr. Dyer.

Six children of mine have been attendants at the Boston public schools and I have a vital interest, therefore, in their well being. It would be well if Mr. Corcoran would do his duty to the community by adding to the school population.

He has been fooling his time away for the last twenty-five years to my knowledge. Let him do his duty to the community, get married, rear a family as I have, and become a good citizen.

SHOE WORKERS' OUTING.

Delegates from All Over New England Coming on Aug. 4

On Sunday, August 4, the New England organized conference, Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, will hold their annual August meeting at Nantasket beach. Delegates from all over New England will attend the meeting, those from near by cities like Brockton making the trip in special cars. In charge of the Brockton delegation is President Charles L. Lowell, Whitman lasters, M. J. Cohen, sole leather workers, and John A. Brennan, of the shoe fasteners. Union label patronage will be strongly advocated as one of the chief themes of the speakers. Dinner will be served, and the local workers will then take it upon themselves to see that their brother workers from distance points see all the attractions at the beach.

HYDE PARK VOTERS.

They Must Register in Boston, Says Corporation Counsel.

Hyde Park voters, or citizens of Ward 26, Boston, must register in Boston in order to preserve their right to vote, according to a decision of Corporation Counsel Corbett, made yesterday, to the Boston Board of Election Commissioners. The question was as to whether in certifying the names of candidates for nomination at the primaries, the board shall use the old voting lists or use the new registration. The new registration furnishes the necessary list, according to Mr. Corbett. The decision means that in order to vote at the primaries, all Hyde Park, or Ward 26, must register. Registration is now going on at the election commissioner's office. Outside registration will be held in September.

CARVER'S OLD HOME DAY.

Eleventh Annual Celebration Comes Next Wednesday.

CARVER, July 27.—Next Wednesday will be Carver's eleventh annual Old Home Day. Every native son and daughter of Carver who has left town will be on hand if possible. The chief exercises will be held in the Baptist Church under the direction of the Old Home Association.

Seth C. C. Finney, president, will call the assembly to order. The Rev. George H. Lockhart will pray. There will be instrumental and vocal numbers and the annual address will be delivered by Arthur Shurtleff of Boston.

In the afternoon there will be a clambake at Shurtleff Park, followed by a baseball game, Carver vs. Midleboro.

FABRE ISN'T STARVING.

Scientist Protests Against Appeal in His Behalf.

PARIS, July 27.—In response to the appeal of the poet Mistral, in behalf of Henri Fabre, the scientist has published this reply.

> I urgently beg you to allow me to protest against the article representing me as dying of hunger as a result of penury and neglect. Such statements are manifestly contrary to the reality. I urgently desire that my old days should be spared such exaggerations and inventions, which are painful to me and my family.

WOOL BILL IN HOUSE.

Ways and Means to Ask Conference With Senate.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The La Follette wool bill, passed by the Senate Thursday, was brought up in the House today by Majority Leader Underwood and was referred to the Ways and Means Committee. Representative Payne, author of the Republican wool tariff said he had contemplated offering his measure as a substitute, but would not do so at the present time.

The Ways and Means Committee will report the bill back promptly and ask for a conference with the Senate.

POSTMEN PLAN OUTING.

Will Have Music and Sports at Labor Day Picnic.

Preparations are being made by Branch No. 34, National Association of Letter Carriers, for its annual field day, which takes place at New Downer's Landing on Labor Day. There will be music, baseball, football and other sports. The following committee is making the arrangements: John J. Murphy, chairman, Thomas Heskett and Charles B. Turner.

Morgan Repulsed by Marshall Field?

Chicago Has a Report That Financier Wanted to Buy Out the Big Chicago Dry Goods Concern.

The AMERICAN last night received the following story from Chicago. It is interesting, and it may, or may not, have the merit of being true.

CHICAGO, July 27.—It is known to only a few insiders that J. P. Morgan & Co. had almost persuaded Marshall Field, in the last years of the merchant's life, to sell that firm to the "General Investor," after the manner of Sears Roebuck & Co. But Field's partners finally dissuaded their "chief."

In the meantime Goldman Sachs & Co. opened negotiations with the Field trustees to do what Morgan & Co. had proposed. Again the partners were stronger than the promoters.

That this great business could be easily and profitably floated is not doubted. The company is capitalized at $8,000,000 and does a business of approximately $80,000,000 annually.

Clams Have Feet and They're Walking Away from New England

So Say Scientific Maids Who Are Investigating Them

GIRL STUDENTS WHO ARE INVESTIGATING CLAM AT WOODS HOLE MARINE BIOLOGICAL LABORATORY

Now Who'd Imagine There'd Be Any Fun in Studyiug Ways of the Elusive Bivalve.

I don't know where I'm going,
But I'm on my way;
I'm pulling out from harbor,
From shore and bay,
I don't know what's the matter,
But I cannot stay,
So Good bye I New England ! !
—Clam Carols.

A GREAT many thoughtful people think that less attention might be given to the Bull Moose and more to the clam and his movements.

The trouble with the clam is this:

Every little clam movement seems to take Brer Clam more and more out of and away from New England.

The cause of the same and the remedy for it are being earnestly studied by scientists, biologists, clamologists and other researchers at Woods Hole and Wellfleet.

One of the most interesting things one learns about a clam is that the young clam has a foot, not feet, but a foot, ONE FOOT.

With only one foot the young clam manages pretty well. When he is wrong side up in the sand or water he reaches out with this foot, turns himself over, travels around to whatever place he seeks then pushes himself down out of sight.

One might suggest for none of these biologists and clamologists down at Woods Hole or Wellfleet have thought of it yet—one might suggest that the clam might be kept in home waters if his foot was cut off.

That sounds rough, but, according to the Massachusetts Commissioners on Fisheries and Game, the clam business of New England is traveling toward a vanishing point on the high speed, with the brake-rod broken.

A clam at home without any foot would be better than a runaway clam which persists in trekking farther and farther away into somebody else's chowder.

At Woods Hole they are studying the clam from a purely scientific standpoint. The studying is done at the Marine Biological Laboratory, of which Dr. Gilman A. Gray is director.

What Dr. Gray doesn't know about biology and plants and fishes and the outward nature and secret ambitions of marine growths isn't worth knowing.

Every Summer students come to the Woods Hole laboratory and study biology and all that goes with it. Many of the students are from New England colleges, young men and young women both. Among those "biologizing" this Summer are the following:

Anne D. Allard, Boston Normal school.
Barbara B. Bradley, Mt. Holyoke.
Alice D. Brooks, Mt. Holyoke.
Goodwin L. Foster, Dartmouth.
Carl S. Hoar, West Acton.
John A. Mackenzie, Williams.
Arlyle Noble, Smith.
Beryl H. Paige, Mt. Holyoke.
F. W. Renfrew, Amherst.
Mabel A. Stone, Wellesley.
J. K. Suris, Williams.
W. H. Weston, Jr., Dartmouth.
Edith G. White, Mt. Holyoke.

There are many more but these are the representatives of New England colleges.

College Investigators.

Then there is a string of "investigators" from colleges. The New England ones include G. A. Baitsell of Yale, Cornelia M. Clapp of Mt. Holyoke, Mary J. Hogue of Mt. Holyoke, G. R. Lyman of Dartmouth, Margaret Morris of New Haven, W. J. V. Osterhout of Harvard, L. W. Williams of Harvard and L. L. Woodruff of Yale.

Beside these there are "research workers," two dozen of 'em. They include the following New Englanders: G. H. Parker of Harvard, G. F. White of Clark University, P. H. Mitchell of Brown, I. A. Field of Clark, A. L. Leathers of Clark, Manton Copeland of Bowdoin, W. Denis of Harvard, B. M. Patten of Harvard and Alice Robertson of Wellesley College.

These students, investigators and research workers are studying biology in its various branches. The clam in one branch.

But the biology students are investigating only from a scientific standpoint. If they can get hold of a few wrinkles in biological life they have nothing to do till tomorrow but study it with the naked eye and under microscopes till it is all studied to pieces.

Over at Wellfleet the investigators are studying the clam from a purely mercenary point of view. At Wellfleet is a laboratory in charge of D. L. Belding, who works for the Fish and Game Commission and who is full of enthusiastic and clammy statistics about the profits in the clam business.

Young Man, Plant Clams.

Mr. Belding will demonstrate to you that $3 worth of clams planted in good ground, average a growth to $15 worth in a year. He informs you that a one-inch clam grows to be two or three inches long in a year.

Looking you squarely in the eye Mr. Belding asserts that he has seen a quart of one-inch clams, under best conditions, produce fifteen quarts of marketable clams in a year.

The Fisheries and Game Commission has worked for years for legislation to protect the shellfish culture, and urges that such protection would be most beneficial.

"Such legislation," declares the commission, "would develop the latent wealth of the tidal waters, increase the output of flats now productive and reclaim large areas of waste shore, would extend the shellfish market, would please the shore cottagers, would insure the fishermen a reliable supply of bait, would increase the earnings of the shore fishermen, would furnish work to thousands of unemployed, would increase the value of shore property, and would furnish the consuming public with greater quantities of sea food of guaranteed purity."

TOADS AT CONCERT PITCH.

Bass Is Little Light, but Brockton Is Satisfied.

BROCKTON, July 27.—The Hoptoad Quartette entertains every evening now on George N. Atwood's lawn at No. 14 Oakland avenue. The quartette appears at early evening. One [illegible] comes from a gutter pipe runway, the other from a neighboring lawn. They lineup and there are honest people who will swear to this—and sing with surprising [illegible]. The bass is a trifle light, but the rest of the quartette is at concert pitch.

Independent Trolleys.

Boston's Mayor to be Newport Leader?

NEWPORT, July 27.—Would Mayor Fitzgerald be as popular here as he was at Palm Beach? Would he make a Newport society leader?

Prominent residents here think he would. They even go so far as to suggest that the old Parkman estate on Bellevue avenue ought to be converted by the city of Boston into an official Summer residence for the Mayor.

The Parkman mansion was put up for auction by the city of Boston at a public sale the other day, but couldn't raise a genuine bidder. The sum wanted was $45,000. So-called "straw" bidders were on hand to start the ball rolling. One of them even bellowed $34,000" as a bid, but it didn't work, so the estate remains the property of Boston.

It has been suggested that Mayor Fitzgerald because of his Chesterfieldian dress, his voice, fondness for music, dancing, golf, tennis and swimming, has all the qualifications for a Summer colonist in the swell quarter and he has enough admirers to boost the cause.

UNIONISTS' BIG RALLY.

Hold Meeting in Courtyard of Blenheim Castle.

WOODSTOCK, Eng., July 27.—Three thousand delegates representing organizations throughout all England held a great Unionist rally in the courtyard of Blenheim Palace here today. The Duke of Marlborough personally received the delegates, escorted them through the palace and afterwards entertained them at luncheon.

The purpose of the rally was to solidify the Unionist ranks in what the opposition to the government believes is an opportunity to regain power because of differences of opinion between the Liberal and Labor forces, home rule disestablishment and other reform measures. Speeches were made by Bonar Law, leader of the opposition; Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster leader, and F. E. Smith, another of the party's most militant chiefs. Among the more distinguished guests were the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk, the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry, Viscount and Viscountess Middleton, Lady Carson and 100 or more members of Parliament.

FISH DIE BY HUNDREDS.

Cranberry Bogs Blamed for Strange Condition.

MIDDLEBORO, July 27.—Cranberry bogs are blamed for wholesale killing of fish, especially perch, in Lake Assawampsett and Lake Quittacus. The fish are picked up by the score along the beaches. Over 1,300 were found between the Birches and Green Point this week.

One of the veteran cottagers says that the fish never died this way before the cranberry bogs were built around the lake region. Many of the big bogs drain into the lake.

The Fish and Game Commission is making soundings to determine the cause, if possible, and the Taunton Water Department, which controls the lake, is keeping the dead fish picked up as much as possible.

WOULD CHANGE HER NAME.

Miss Rundles Asks Congress to Send Her a New One.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Miss Alice Rundles of Madison, Va., in a letter received here today, asked Congress to send her "A real nice name." The letter says:

"I will ask a favor of you if you please. My former name is Rundles and I don't like the name and I desire to ask the Legislature for the favor of sending me a nice name. I am a young lady seventeen years old. Please do your best in selecting a real nice name. I will pay the cost, so let me hear from you by return mail."

Band Concert at Blue Hill.

The band concert at Blue Hill Reservation Ground, Canton, postponed from last Sunday on account of rain, will be given at four o'clock this afternoon.

THEY'D MAKE JOHN QUINN A JUSTICE

"Jimmy" Gallivan's Friends Would, That Is, So James Could Be the Sheriff.

Street Commissioner Gallivan's friends, who are determined that their candidate shall be sheriff of Suffolk County, have been quietly working for the past few days on a plan to have Sheriff Quinn retire from the contest.

The justiceship of the East Boston court is the plum that they would like to have Sheriff Quinn accept in lieu of running for sheriff.

There isn't any assurance that Governor Foss would give the sheriff the appointment because there are at least ten candidates from the East Boston district, all with strong support. Those who are booming Sheriff Quinn, however, feel confident that the friendship which exists between the Governor and the Suffolk County sheriff, coupled with the influence that the Gallivan supporters would bring to bear in his behalf, would be sufficient to corral the prize.

Sheriff Quinn has often expressed a desire for a judicial position. He also likes to be sheriff. Nobody has yet sounded Honest John on the question because the negotiations haven't reached that stage. He may decide to get out, but his friends said last night it would take a pretty strong inducement to get him to leave the sheriff fight just now.

SUES DRUGGIST FOR $10,000.

Ice Cream Patron Declares He Was Poisoned.

MIDDLEBORO, July 27.—Kenneth L. Child, who has just left a Boston hospital, has filed a $10,000 damage suit against J. F. Morse, the Centre street druggist, for illness alleged to have been caused by Childs being served an "arsenic college ice" at Morse's store.

According to the allegation arsenic was put on walnut meats to attract rats and the dish was allowed to remain near the soda fountain over night. The next day Everett Clough, a new clerk and brother-in-law of Childs, waited on Childs and Miss Vesta Jackson of Cambridge, who ordered college ices. Clough did not know the walnut meats were poisoned. Childs nearly died. Miss Jackson was less ill. She did not eat so heartily as Childs did.

LEPERS LOOSE IN NEW YORK

Live in City Flats—"No Danger," Say Authorities.

NEW YORK, July 27.—There are at the present time more than forty lepers living in apartments in New York City, according to a report from the Skin and Cancer Hospital. The report says that "there is no foolish dread of the disease in this city, such as is sometimes shown in other places," and declares that the disease is not contagious in this climate. The dangers from tuberculosis and other diseases are far more to be dreaded than leprosy.

EX-MANAGER SUES ARMOUR

W. D. Miles Declares Company Owes Him $169,848.

CHICAGO, July 27.—William D. Miles, who was a principal witness for the government in the recent packers' trial, and who was a general manager for the Armour Packing Company at Kansas City, charges that he has been defrauded of $169,848.74 by Armour, and has brought suit to recover. Miles claims he was offered a thousand shares in the business and that he was arbitrarily dismissed by J. Ogden Armour and given only $40,848.74, when the sum due him under his contract was $209,940.27.

COMPENSATION LAW A GREAT SUCCESS

Twenty Fatal Cases Reported to Board In Three Weeks; One Adjusted in Three Days.

Robert E. Grandfield, secretary of the Massachusetts Industrial Accident Board, has written exclusively for today's Sunday AMERICAN, a special [illegible] successful operation of the Workingmen's Compensation law [illegible] went into effect four weeks ago. In addition to its intrinsic value, the article is all the more interesting because [illegible] suggested by Governor Foss, the editor of today's AMERICAN.

"See Secretary Grandfield [illegible] to get us up a good statement of the Workingmen's Compensation law [illegible] Governor-Editor's assignment [illegible] staff of reporters. So the AMERICAN today prints Secretary Grandfield's statement, which is set forth [illegible] strong points of the new law and [illegible] tive administration of the act by the Industrial Accident Board.

By ROBERT E. GRANDFIELD.
Secretary Massachusetts Industrial Accident Board.

The Workmen's Compensation Act, so-called, being chapter 751 of the Acts of 1911 as amended by chapters 172 and 571, Acts of 1912, which is being so broadly and successfully administered by the Industrial Accident Board, is undoubtedly one of the most important pieces of industrial legislation ever enacted by the General Court of Massachusetts. The act itself, interpreted and administered by the members of this able and intelligent board, has already begun to keep the promise of its sponsors and bids fair to bring about more harmonious and sympathetic relations between the employers and workmen of the State.

Injuries a Part of Cost.

The act is based upon the principle which has come to be recognized generally throughout the world that the expense of injuries incidental to modern industry should be treated as a part of the cost of production, and that the workmen should be compensated for such injuries, not on the basis of the fault of the employer or for any other reason, but [illegible] fact of the injury. It is also intended that the compensation provided shall be promptly paid, without entangling legal processes, and it has been the aim of the Industrial Accident Board and of the insurance companies following their understanding of the wishes of the board to so oil the machinery of the law that its intent may be realized and those entitled to compensation receive it when most needed, speedily and regularly.

The possibilities of the law are well shown in the first case [illegible] injury that of Joseph Braiteno, which came before the board recently. Braiteno was injured while employed at the works of the Archibald Wheel Company in Lawrence, and was taken to the hospital. There he was operated upon and died the next day. On the day following, the insurer admitted that he was under the act and thus, within the period of three days from the time of his injury, Braiteno's widow and child were assured of the regular receipt of a compensation of $7.23 per week for a period of 300 weeks, a total of $2,169, spread over approximately six years' time, as a result of this humane law and the efficacious interpretation and administration by the members of the Industrial Accident Board.

20 Fatal Cases in Three Weeks.

During the past three weeks, twenty fatal accidents have been reported to the board, and in no single instance, as shown by an examination of the facts relating to the injury, is there a probability that the dependents of the deceased would have prevailed in a suit under the common law. As it is in every instance, the probability that the limit permitted under the act, a payment of 300 weeks to the dependents, based on half the "average weekly wage," will be made in each case. No suit, no dreary waiting, no poverty-stricken dependents. Contrariwise, prompt recognition of their claim, a board that will see that no unfair agreement is approved and speedy payment of the compensation provided under the act.

Already many "agreements in regard to compensation" are being presented to the board for approval and without delay the board is acting upon them, going over the facts carefully and finding a disposition on the part of the insurers to heed any suggestions made by the members which will cause the machinery of the law to run smoothly. The mooted question of "lump sum settlements" has been brought to the attention of the commission at this early stage.

The board has invariably declined to approve of any settlement of this nature, making it clear that the language of the act and its intent is to discourage such settlements and have the payments made weekly and with regularity.

FIRE AT NARRAGANSETT.

Six Cottages Destroyed; $100,000 Loss at Pier.

NARRAGANSETT PIER, July 27.—Six cottages, one of them the once famous Little Casino, were destroyed, and four others were partially burned by a fire this afternoon which threatened for a time to sweep the heart of the Summer colony. Fire apparatus from three towns fought the flames, while scores of polo and tennis players and other society men assisted the firemen as volunteers. The loss amounted to more than $100,000.

The fire proved the worst that has visited the Pier since 1900, when the Casino and the Rockingham Hotel were burned. It was two hours before the firemen had brought the flames under control, after one of the prettiest spots in the society district had been charred and blackened. A crowd of 5,000 watched the fire.

Say Sunday Golfing Is Wicked as Gardening

That's Why Tomato and Bean Raisers Are Up in Arms Against New Melrose Rule

Amateur gardeners in Melrose agreed last night that Sunday weeding is no wickeder than Sunday golfing. Then they drew up a petition calling for fair play and mentioning the Bellevue Golf Club quite prominently.

Police Chief Kerr of Melrose served notice Friday that, beginning today, no garden work would be allowed on Sunday. The chief allowed that gardening is unnecessary work and, as such, a desecration of the Sabbath, just as much as building a house or running a laundry.

Every other man in Melrose keeps a garden. It is the regular thing on Sunday in the "garden set" to do a little weeding, clean up the odd corners and then [illegible] over the fence and swap tomato and string bean yarns with your neighbor.

Chief Kerr ruled all this out at one declaration.

Last night several citizens of Brunswick Park in the Highland section started this petition asking that all residents of the city be treated the same. The petition alleges that members of the Bellevue Golf Club—and several of them are clergymen—play golf on Sunday over the club links.

The Brunswick Parkers feel that the difference between digging up the turf with a brassie [illegible] weeds with a ninety-eight cent hoe is so small, from a theological standpoint, as not to be discernible.

"Let golfers and gardeners be treated alike," is the cry of the tomato and bean raisers.

Pliable Stationery for Our Congressmen

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Representative Willis of Ohio is shocked to find upon a scrutiny of the record of the expenditure of the House contingent fund that among the articles furnished to members at government expense are included "powder puffs, vanity bags, side combs and music rolls."

Under the law members of the House of Representatives have an annual allowance of $125 for stationery. The House maintains a complete stationery store and in the course of time there has developed an emporium of department store range in the variety of goods for sale.

In addition to the articles enumerated by Mr. Willis there may be found in the House stationery room vanity bags, side combs, tooth and nail brushes, manicure and pedicure outfits.

The goods are sold to Congressmen "at cost." Economical legislators draw down the $125 allowance in cash on the opening day of each session, and then trust to luck and fortunate committee assignments to keep down their expenditure for personal stationery.

The Perquisites of Beautiful Women

CHICAGO, July 27.—In a purely legal way, J. Hamilton Lewis, he of pink whiskers and fastidious dress, has this to say about women of beauty.

If a man weds an invalid sweetheart, it is expected he will nurse her through life.

If he marries a frail girl, is is presumed that he will concede her every comfort in her weakness.

But if he marries a beautiful woman, if the woman yields her unusual charms to monopolization by one man, we demand that he clothe and house and establish her, that her gifts from Heaven shall not languish unappreciated.

The naked jewel must have its setting. The rose must have its perfume. The masterpiece must have its frame. The world must have its beautiful women with their gowns and jewels, their expensive hats and tidy shoes and soft attentions.

4,500 Tech Graduates Living in Bay State

Over 4,500 of the 10,000 living graduates of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology are now living in the New England States, according to statistics compiled and published in the "Register of Former Students," which lists ninety per cent. of the graduates.

Boston alone has 2,200, or over one-fifth. Other cities of the Commonwealth have 1,800. Thus Massachusetts is far ahead of any other State with about 4,000 graduates of her famous technical institute.

New York State has 1,300 graduates, and New York City has 800 of these. Among other States with a big list are Pennsylvania with 473, Ohio with 325, and Illinois 436. The ten Southern States have 325 graduates among them. There are five DuPonts from Wilmington, Delaware.

Oyster Bay has a single graduate.

Boys and Girls Trained in Practical Gardening

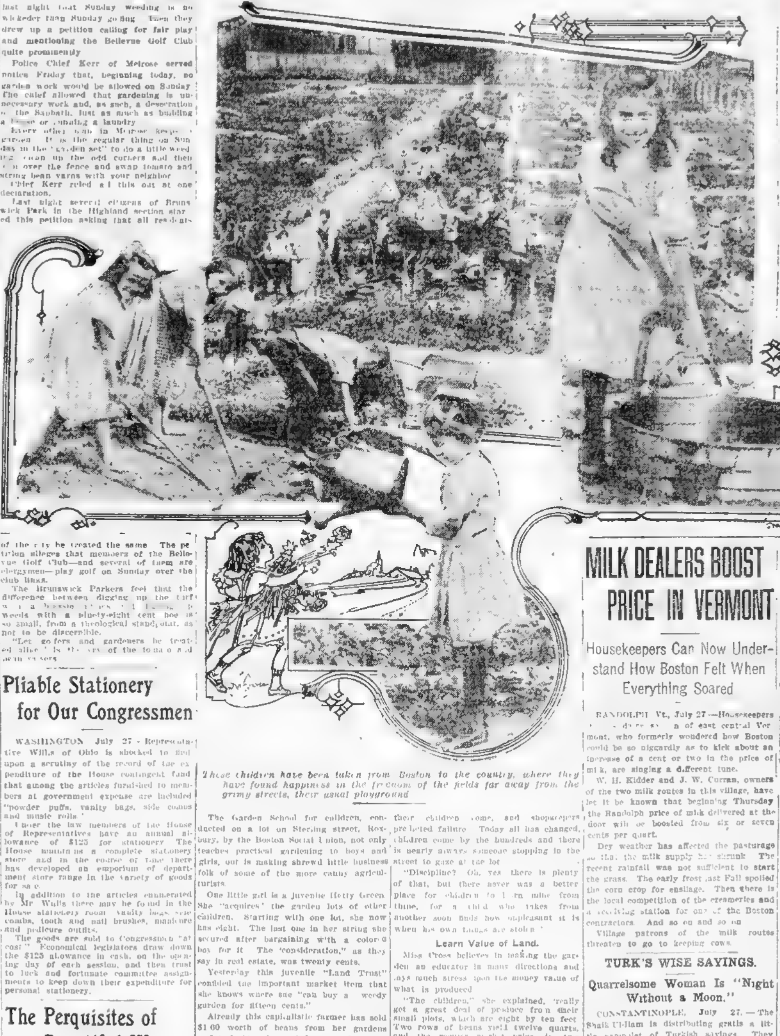
Little Folk Developed in Social Union School

LITTLE GARDENERS AT WORK ON STERLING STREET FIELD IN ROXBURY.



These children have been taken from Boston to the country, where they have found happiness in the freedom of the fields far away from the grimy streets, their usual playground

The Garden School for children, conducted on a lot on Sterling street, Roxbury, by the Boston Social Union, not only teaches practical gardening to boys and girls, but is making shrewd little business folk of some of the more canny agriculturists.

One little girl is a juvenile Hetty Green. She "acquires" the garden lots of other children. Starting with one lot, she now has eight. The last one in her string she secured after bargaining with a colored boy for it. The "consideration," as they say in real estate, was twenty cents.

Yesterday this juvenile "Land Trust" confided the important market item that she knows where she "can buy a weedy garden for fifteen cents."

Already this capitalistic farmer has sold $1.60 worth of beans from her gardens and is looking forward for a good market for her tomatoes, beans and cabbages.

Variety Without End.

An open wire fence along Sterling street is covered here and there with scarlet runners. Through the fence one sees 160 small plots of grounds hidden beneath cabbages, beginning to head beets with dark red leaves a foot high, rows of lettuce ready for the market, tomato [illegible] growing heavy with fruit, string beans twelve quarts on two short rows, radishes plump in the soil, Swiss chard, [illegible] carrots, corn and [illegible] decorating [illegible] zinnias [illegible] coxcombs, sunflowers and portulaca.

A tool house is covered with vines and beyond the plot of corn a new Summer house is filled with babies at play.

Near the entrance toward Washington street is the "observation garden" where are to be seen flourishing tobacco plants, a sweet potato vine, buckwheat, barley, oats, cotton, okra, potatoes, wheat and artichokes.

Nor yet is this everything; covering the paths, bending over small hoes and rakes, behind wheelbarrows, or sprinkling water from watering pots are young farmers, the children of Roxbury. Among them, not much taller than the rest, running from one plot to another, giving directions, settling disagreements and with eyes for everything is the chief director and general manager of the Garden School, Miss Jean Cross.

Children Quickly Won.

It is this little lady who comes every day from Cambridge, who is responsible for this remarkable change in the appearance of the Sterling Street lot. She is one of few who understand the culture of children as well as the [illegible] of plants. The rough ground where were bricks and stones is now smooth, bearing fruit and flowers, boys and girls who were quite as rough as the ground are growing gentle with an absorbing interest that is worth while.

The garden is one of the activities of the Boston Social Union, an organization representing the social settlements of the South End. Miss Cross was engaged to arouse interest in the growth of flowers and in the cultivation of vacant lots. This is the second year the lot on Sterling street has been used for garden purposes and it is today the most successful experiment of its kind in the city.

"At first," said Miss Cross, "everyone seemed suspicious and unwilling to co-operate; parents were afraid to have their children come, and shopkeepers predicted failure. Today all has changed, children come by the hundreds and there is nearly always someone stopping in the street to gaze at the lot.

"Discipline? Oh, yes there is plenty of that, but there never was a better place for children to learn mine from thine, for a child who takes from another soon finds how unpleasant it is when his own things are stolen."

Learn Value of Land.

Miss Cross believes in making the garden an educator in many directions and lays much stress upon the money value of what is produced.

"The children," she explained, "really get a great deal of produce from their small plots, which are eight by ten feet. Two rows of beans yield twelve quarts, and the regular market price is two quarts for 25 cents. When the children find out that they have actually made $1.50 from two short rows of beans they grow quite excited. Most of them, however, do not care to sell what they raise, but take it home to cook.

"It is this real addition to the family table that has aroused the interest of the parents. Many of the children do much of their own cooking and serve their fathers and mothers who come home [illegible] with greens, beets, beans and lettuce from their own garden."

Many [illegible] are made by the young [illegible] of whom [illegible] the growing of green [illegible]. Miss Cross tells of one boy who insisted upon raising big pickles such as he had bought from the store for a cent. The thought of small cucumbers did not satisfy him in the lease; he wanted pickle seeds or nothing.

Visitors wishing to see the children at work should go any morning between 9.30 and 12.00.

Diplomas for Gardeners.

At the end of the season the South End Social Union will present diplomas to the children who have done exceptionally well with their plots. The awards are made not only for the [illegible] of the garden itself, but upon [illegible] general helpfulness and kindliness [illegible] and fellow gardeners.

At present it is somewhat difficult to tell which are the best, but among those whose plots are doing especially well are Phyllis Rankin, William Campbell, Charles and Harold Barns, Charles Waters, Eddie Cosgrove, Peter Magar, Lizzie Nies, Caroline Hedstrom, George Eason and Alonzo McClain. Others are almost as good as these and may before diploma time improve greatly.

The expenses for this garden are met by private subscription and for some unaccountable reason the treasury has become empty. Any donations sent to Emily Babb, Parker Memorial Building, would be gratefully received and might prevent the possible early closing of the most appreciated garden spot in the South End if not in the whole city.

MILK DEALERS BOOST PRICE IN VERMONT

Housekeepers Can Now Understand How Boston Felt When Everything Soared

RANDOLPH, Vt., July 27.—Housekeepers [illegible] of east central Vermont, who formerly wondered how Boston could be so niggardly as to kick about an increase of a cent or two in the price of milk, are singing a different tune.

W. H. Kidder and J. W. Curran, owners of the two milk routes in this village, have let it be known that beginning Thursday the Randolph price of milk delivered at the door will be boosted from six or seven cents per quart.

Dry weather has affected the pasturage so that the milk supply has shrunk. The recent rainfall was not sufficient to start the grass. The early frost last Fall spoiled the corn crop for ensilage. Then there is the local competition of the creameries and a receiving station for one of the Boston contractors. And so on and so on.

Village patrons of the milk routes threaten to go to keeping cows.

TURK'S WISE SAYINGS.

Quarrelsome Woman Is "Night Without a Moon."

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 27.—The Shaik Ul-Ilam is distributing gratis a little pamphlet of Turkish sayings. They will be of interest to everybody.

1—Under a mother's soul heaven itself springs into life.

2—Whoever is good to a sorrowing mother will be rewarded tenfold.

4—Woman can make heaven or hell for a man in his home.

5—The brain of a quarrelsome woman is night without a moon.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., July 27.—The colored brethren in politics got a severe jolt today when John W. [illegible], leader of the Bull Moose party in West Tennessee, announced that no negro would be admitted to the Nashville convention on August 8.

INDIANS TO PRESENT 'HIAWATHA' IN WOODS

YORK, Me., July 27.—Boston society women in the Summer colony here have banded themselves together with a number of literary celebrities like William Dean Howells, Thomas Nelson Page, John Kendrick Bangs, Finley Peter Dunn and others, in a movement to save from the woodsman's axe a [illegible] acre patch of forest primeval in this town. [illegible]

The great Indian poem [illegible] society women, [illegible] chase of the hundred [illegible] soil of which has grown some of the finest specimens of white pine in the State. Unless sufficient money is raised the [illegible] will be cut down and the logs sent to a bat factory's saw mills.

Of course the prominence of the persons interested in the movement has attracted widespread interest. It is likely hundreds will come from Boston to see the unusual performance of "Hiawatha." Some of the well known persons behind the fete are former Governor Frank W. Rollins of New Hampshire, Dr. Walter Councilman, John Cadwalder, Mrs. Barrett Wendell, Mrs. George Tyson, Mrs. Thacher Loring, Mrs. John Breckenridge, Mrs. Alexander Lambert, Mrs. Fred Dexter and Mrs. d'Este.

As these Iroquois and Ojibway tribes speak no English, the play is given in pantomime and a hidden narrator reads the poem.

Another feature of this ten-day open air fete is the introduction of a band of boy scouts, who will camp in the woods and patrol them to watch out for any carelessly ignited fires caused by picnickers or thoughtless smokers. These boys will get their first lesson in woodcraft.

TO BE KING'S GUEST

Soldier of Fortune to Visit George at Windsor

LONDON, July 27.—Slatin Pasha, one of the most remarkable soldiers of fortune of the nineteenth century, will, when he arrives in town in a few days, be the guest of King George at Windsor. The last occasion on which the former prisoner of the Khalifa was an honored guest of the royal family was when King Edward had him down to Balmoral to meet Sir Harry Aubrey Maclean, sometime commander-in-chief of the multitude of semi-disciplined cut-throats that made up the Army of His Magnificence, the Sultan of Morocco. The late Sir Alexander Condie Stephen said one night Slatin and Maclean entered, at King Edward's instigation, into a conspiracy of yarning. It was half past four in the morning when this modernized form of Arabian Nights' entertainment was adjourned, and, added Condie Stephen, every blood-curdling story that the pair were responsible for were hard, brutal facts, well known as such at Fez and Khartoum.

This has been accomplished after thirty-five years of agitation by an act passed by the Legislature of 1911, and the State will spend nearly $150,000. When completed it will make the river navigable almost its entire length, and will reclaim 2,000 acres of malarial meadows for habitable purposes.

DEBUSSY'S 'CRIME OF LOVE' FOR BOSTON

By FREDERICK JOHNS

PARIS, July 10.—The latest opera of Claude Debussy, author of "Pelleas et Melisande," [illegible] Boston. [illegible]

[illegible] of the latest [illegible] were spread [illegible] when I entered and he started to talk about it with me.

"It was inspired by the poems of [illegible]," he said. "The libretto is a clever arrangement of the [illegible] of Verlaine and was supplied me by one of the greatest admirers of the famous poet among [illegible] of the day, M. Charles Mo[illegible].

"I do not intend this to be a vigorous [illegible] work. It is a delicate [illegible] story and music en[illegible] many pretty songs that I shall try to set to appropriate melody. [illegible] very hard on this, [illegible] will be my chef d'[illegible]."

It was rather an unusual event for [illegible] because of his gratitude [illegible] than for any other [illegible] consented to receive a [illegible] like Wagner and [illegible] poverty [illegible]

[illegible] dwells in the most ex[illegible] surroundings, for he is a [illegible] rich man.

His prosperity does not come from [illegible] compositions, for not even Wagner [illegible] had to fight so hard for recognition. Even now that his operas and orchestral compositions are per[illegible] everywhere, the bitter enmity [illegible] conservative element among [illegible] concentrated on him [illegible] the public remains indifferent. Nevertheless, he is the most remarkable of living composers, not even Richard Strauss equals him in originality and power to surprise and attract attention.

[illegible] one had specific directions he would never locate the [illegible] of Debussy.

Finding Debrussy's Home.

You drive out the love[illegible] avenue of the Bois de Boulogne until you have almost reached that historic park, then turn to the right and proceed boldly up a narrow and winding lane with high walls to right and left not so high as to shut off the fragrance of the gardens behind. At the very end is a high gate, and upon this gate you bang with a huge bronze knocker.

The gate swings open [illegible] and you hold your breath at sudden sight of an equ[illegible]. There are cool shade trees, a [illegible] of flowers, green grass plots, and [illegible] walks, with here and there a wicker chair to show that people are [illegible] habit of enjoying the place.

Right ahead is a house like a fairy pavilion, with long French windows, [illegible] vines upon its walls. A [illegible] ring out of the door. "M[illegible] Debussy?"

[illegible] gentleman who has [illegible] "Entrez, monsieur."

[illegible] way through pleasant [illegible] decorated with costly bric-[illegible] which seemed to be almost all windows. It contained a piano, several large bookcases, filled mostly with paper-covered books, racks of bric-a-brac and a table covered with sheets of music, at which [illegible]

[illegible] does not look in the [illegible] him. He [illegible] opera singer [illegible] eyes [illegible] thoughts.

He is [illegible] height and [illegible] are not at all [illegible]

[illegible] a normal sort of [illegible] years old, and [illegible] intelligent looking [illegible] sort of man to [illegible]

If you told me [illegible] opera I could readily [illegible] Debussy is not a highbrow in appearance or manner. The hair grows low on his forehead and [illegible] though well barbered. He does not even wear a string tie like some of his admirers in Boston. He has a curlish blackish brown beard, but it is not a full beard nor is it very long.

He is a cigarette smoker of a most persistent and devoted type. When one cigarette is smoked so short it endangers his mustache he produces another, which he lights from the dying cigarette, and thus permits no intermission.

In conversation he [illegible] straightforward [illegible] quick to see a joke, and he gestures like a true Frenchman. [illegible] French[illegible] man he also speaks [illegible]

I heard myself asking Debussy if he liked Chinese [illegible]

"I find it interesting and not so unmusical as many people seem to think," he replied.

"When are you coming to America?"

"Ah, I don't know. I dislike long journeys."

"You fear seasickness?"

"Not at all. I [illegible] seasick. I love the sea. Do you know my suite 'La Mer'?"

STOCK SPECULATION STAYS STAGNANT WHILE TRADE IN GENERAL GAINS GROUND

By W. H. ROSS.

STATE STREET, July 27.—Dullness in stock markets is probably as psychological as anything else, for on the basis of material aspects there ought to be securities buying to an extent which would make the exchanges very busy. But the speculative spirit remains dormant and crop, metal and industrial conditions which ordinarily have weight are seemingly without influence upon the great number of people who in less favorable times have been customers of brokers.

W. H. ROSS

How long this will last is something which no one can tell. It has been often said that the [illegible] who speculate are like a flock of sheep. [illegible] "lambs" as a term was thus deducted. It is a fauna fact that sheep need a leader, and perhaps the apathy that now exists is due to the lack of initiative on the part of men who are looked upon by the people as potent to produce profits.

Lack of the kind of leadership which inspires sublime confidence has also been considered by many professional traders within a few months as explaining much. Movements of all kinds require the kind of genius which inspires or directs and in the stock market at present, with fundamentals pronounced correct, there is a dearth of the dominating, electrifying personal equation.

MARKET IS TOO TAME.

The big interests may be waiting, as is assumed, for knowledge of the most definite nature about harvests, or to learn what kind of a government is going to live at Washington from March, 1913, to the same month in 1917, before applying any galvanism to stocks, but it appears to be the situation that the public at large is not going to begin buying on an at all satisfactory scale until there is some dust and bustle kicked up in the market. When it comes to [illegible] marginal profits the public prefers a maelstrom to a placid pool.

It may be axiomatically said that where there is no excitement there wont be any speculative spirit. As things are, it does not seem possible for the small fry to get the market to move far one way or the other [illegible] who hold stocks will not sell and there is nothing on the counter to put [illegible] into the bargain hunters.

New England Handicapped.

There is more complaint about stagnation in trade around Boston than in any other big city in the country. It is complained of in this section in almost every line of trade. This is partly due to the great natural drawback of New England. It is not a producer of either crops or the raw materials which go into manufactures. The South has its cotton and tobacco crops to produce money and the West its great grain fields and mineral deposits. Old New England must wait until vast sums are collected elsewhere for crops and there is a renewed demand for the goods and the devices which are made in its factories. New England's chief [illegible] are the [illegible] vested in [illegible].

Business has its mean average as well as the temperature, and it is seldom that there is a year when industrial and trade conditions are extremely satisfactory, just as it is true that an ideal season for crops is infrequent. The ancients had a theory illustrated by the plagues in Egypt, that good and bad cycles were of seven years duration. This country has endured five lean years, and if there is any truth in the lore of the dim and misty past the prosperity period cannot be remote. Business however, has averaged better since the panic of 1907 than it did for the same period after any preceding one. It has not been a period of "bread lines" and soup kitchens, and most men who wanted to work have not only been able to get employment but the scale of wages has been going up through half a decade when employers almost universally complained there was little profit in keeping store or in running a factory.

Armies of Men Needed.

There are it is stated, 50,000 men needed in steel mills in this country now, and production by the same in the ratio of new orders is being retarded by a scarcity of labor. Moreover these mills will pay the [illegible] wages ever offered unskilled hands. It is [illegible] that Northwestern farmers [illegible] those in Canada, will need [illegible] men for the harvest fields. Coming [illegible] there is a dearth of operatives [illegible] of New England cities.

[illegible] the United States as a whole [illegible] indicate that business is [illegible] improving. It will [illegible] months before there is any such activity [illegible] that business profits [illegible] great as they were before the [illegible] collapsed. It [illegible] of a gravity law [illegible] which [illegible] a man [illegible] further [illegible] day than he can climb in [illegible].

The stock market may grow much more active before the Summer is over, but previous to any madding crowd assembling in speculative districts [illegible] may have to take a more [illegible] and, above all things, people must feel so prosperous that they are not afraid to indulge their speculative proclivities.

For the [illegible] certainty is [illegible] kind of buying [illegible] is another. Politics may [illegible] check than ever [illegible] party state campaigning next August, as well, higher money rates are likely. The moving of crops will be a factor in regard to that. There are a number of conditions which in the opinion of the best informed are calculated to deter great financial interests from starting any bull movement at once.

Unprecedented Prosperity.

There is no question but that the greatest financiers are agreed in expecting a steady improvement in business, and several men whose acumen has been impressively demonstrated by their personal success in life are of the opinion that this country is rapidly progressing toward prosperity beyond precedent—and the United States has had epochs of that kind which has made the rest of the world stare in envy.

The stock market almost always mirrors business in general and in considering the securities situation it should not be forgotten that if it is dull at present it is also really strong. The main trouble now is a lack of strenuous buying.

When business reaches the boom stage the railroad situation will receive more attention than it is getting. Railroad development has not kept up its pace [illegible] several recent years and doubts are expressed as to the ability of all the transportation companies to handle the big business looked for this Fall. Higher wages and lower rates have prevented managements from extending lines as they wished or providing the equipment needed for increased traffic. All roads have bigger revenues for a prospect, but some of them will lose some possible profits because they are behind in facilities.

The development of big areas in this country depend upon new rails being laid. If roads cease to be good dividend earners capital will not be anxious to finance extensions. It is not for the interest of the people of the United States to have transportation corporations oppressed by nobody or anywhere.

If a road opens up a new area in the [illegible] West it [illegible] an enlarged market for New England's [illegible] goods and other [illegible]. The [illegible] of a railroad in [illegible] region of the country [illegible] have [illegible] business [illegible] Boston. [illegible] and [illegible] of it [illegible].

BUSINESS IS BETTER BUT PROFITS SMALL

Returns Not Enough to Match the High Cost of Living.

By B. C. FORBES

NEW YORK, July 27.—Conditions are contradictory. Here we have the railroads [illegible] into the market for thousands of [illegible] cars and hundreds of engines, orders of steel soaring on [illegible] for prompt deliveries, general trade (as measured by bank clearings and railroad traffic) of large volume, foreign commerce breaking all records, the crop prospects improving daily, an absence of excitement over politics, a stock market that more than holds its own, and no present stringency in the money market—yet much dissatisfaction with conditions, much complaining of poor profits and of high costs and constant demands that "something be done" are the order of the day.

Explanations Are Varied.

What is the matter? One economist will tell you that the increase in the production of gold is at the bottom of all our woes. Another holds the trusts entirely responsible. "The tariff," says a third. The lack of foodstuffs, owing to the unpopularity of farming, is blamed by a fourth. The trade unions, which restrict output, is the pet scapegoat of a fifth, while politicians [illegible] the Interstate Commerce Commission, national and individual extravagance, the [illegible] for [illegible] of the expensive sort. Wall Street [illegible] trotted out as [illegible] responsible for the present unsatisfactory state of affairs.

[illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] growth [illegible] trusts, the tariff [illegible] scarcity of farm products [illegible] policies of certain labor organizations, excessive [illegible] inordinate pleasure-seeking and the other causes cited do each [illegible] one, have some bearing upon [illegible] high cost of living and its offspring [illegible] content.

The Acme of Stupidity

The Stanley report's recommendation that control of more than 30 per cent. of any industry be held illegal is the acme of stupidity. Truly our politicians are apt to be drowned when they venture upon the deep sea of economics.

[illegible] the [illegible] business [illegible] of [illegible] industry, of tariff, of foreign [illegible] of ability.

[illegible] necessarily worked to do a [illegible] business.

But industrial corporations can, should and will be controlled by the people [illegible] their government. [illegible] have been brought under [illegible] regulation, let similar treatment be extended to industrial combinations.

National Biscuit and Rival.

The gross business of the National Biscuit Company in 1911 amounted to 45,340,232, while that of the Loose-Wiles Company, the second largest baking concern in the country, was $11,606,461. The National has an authorized capitalization of $55,000,000, of which $54,040,500 is outstanding, and the other $15,000,000 all issued. National has paid the 7 per cent. dividend on preferred since organization, and in 1911 increased common disbursement to regular rate of 7 per cent annually with an extra 2 per cent in the Fall. Expectation that this additional payment will not be declared this year is held responsible for the recent decline in shares. Loose-Wiles has paid dividends of 7 per cent. on both $5,000,000 first and $2,000,000 second preferred stocks since the concern was formed this Spring, but the common has yet to benefit from profits.

Big Tennessee Zinc Mine.

A big deposit of zinc ore near Knoxville, Tenn., has been taken under option by the American Zinc, Lead and Smelting Company. The ore grade is from 4 to 4½ per cent. and a deposit about 3,000 feet long, 650 feet wide and from a few feet to 175 feet thick is being developed. Approximately 3,000,000 tons of ore has been located.

NEW YORK, July 27.—The directors of the United States Steel Corporation will meet on Tuesday next to act on quarterly dividends and Wall Street does not [illegible] but that the regular rate of 1¾ per cent. for preferred and 1¼ for common will be declared. It is generally believed that second quarter net earnings were around $[illegible] 000,000, and that it would not be surprising if third quarter net exceeded $30,000,000. Steel manufacturers say the Stanley recommendations have now taken the form of campaign literature, and have lost what little influence they might have had in shaping public sentiment.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 27.—The Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse Commission is urging co-operation between roads and shippers to prevent congestion when crops begin to move. Coal dealers are asked to place their orders at once.

I. C. C Railroad Figures.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The Interstate Commerce Commission's annual report gives railroad mileage for year ended June 30, 1911, as 246,124 and [illegible] tion as $19,208,081. Of the railroad stock outstanding, 32.85 per cent. paid no dividends. The total operating revenue was $2,789,761,668, and expenses $1,915,054,005. Operating expenses averaged $7,867 per mile of line.

BLACK RUST RUMORS SEND WHEAT DOWN

A Sympathetic Movement, Merely, and Rank and File Expect Good Yield.

By JOSEPH F. PRITCHARD.

CHICAGO, July 27.—Owing to the further reports of black rust in portions of the important Spring wheat sections by one of the leading authorities, the tendency of the values worked unmistakeably toward higher levels. It was a sympathetic movement, however, and while the rank and file of the trade are of the belief that nearly, if not quite a record [illegible] will be harvested, sentiment was an important factor in the day's transactions. The Minneapolis market was strong, especially through the late part of the session. Stocks at that point were off 835,000 bushels for the week with an advance in the cash premium. Flour sales are said to have shown a considerable improvement and Winnipeg reported an excellent cash demand, and there was considerable talk about imperfect weather conditions for the growing crop in that country.

Heavy Receipts in Southwest.

Heavier receipts in the southwest attracted considerable attention and were responsible for lower prices for the cash [illegible] at the [illegible] market centres. Cash interests were interested in the sudden activity in the export trade at the seaboard and as high as fifty loads were reported worked for export. Cash sales were 85,000 bushels.

There was less attention given to the market than in wheat, and for the time being it is expected to be nothing more than a weather proposition, and there is little outside of the professional trade.

Oats Continue Heavy.

Owing to a sharp decline in the July and cash, positions of oats showed continued [illegible] and a final range of ⅛ to [illegible] cents [illegible] the previous close. The [illegible] expects a big run here at the opening of next week. While offerings of the other three white oats to arrive sold at thirty-three white oats to arrive sold at thirty-two cents. The southwestern cash markets were again weak, St. Louis showing a decline of one to four cents. Primary receipts were 372,000 bushels, against 986,[illegible] bushels a year ago. Cash sales were [illegible] and aggregated [illegible] bushels.

SAN ANTONIO, July 27. British capital is constructing an irrigation system [illegible] at a cost with [illegible] about $10,000,000. The canals will provide water for 60,000 acres and a proposed second unit will take care of 40,000 more. The syndicate proposes to build four towns and install cotton and cotton seed oil mills, canning factories and other industrial plants.

GOVERNMENT GIVES OIL TRUST A BOOST

Rockefeller Richer Than Ever Today, and Owns One-Third of Stock.

By BOERSIANER

CHICAGO, July 27.—It has been an open secret for months that in "disintegrating" the Standard Oil Company, the United States Supreme Court integrated that gigantic business the closer. Where there were some 6,000 stockholders before the "disintegration," there are today less than 2,000. From owning much less than one-half the $100,000 capital stock, John D. Rockefeller and his immediate associates now own over two-thirds.

BOERSIANER

And the within-the-doors syndicate acquired their latest additions at low quotations. The first acquisition was made the day following the "averse" decision, when the price slumped into the 300's. The second and final purchases were placed when, conforming with the court's order, the company was (theoretically) divided into thirty three companies and separate certificates were issued proportionately.

The deluge of infinitesimally fractional shares utterly bewildered the mass of stockholders, and the most part of these rushed to liquidation, thus slumping the certificates still further.

Therefore, the explanation of the bold advance since the issuance, in accordance with the court's mandate, is the vastly enlarged ownership of the original proprietors, and also the enormously increased earnings.

Oil Declined.

Pending the suit in the upper tribunal, oil declined rapidly. It was [illegible] the Standard Oil Company's salesmen that the Dutch refiners had invaded the American field. To make it uncomfortable for the foreign intruders—to teach them a memorable lesson—oil had been reduced to almost cost price. Soon the Dutch must retire or face ruin.

The Dutch did retire—but not until the courts had done their worst—or was it their unconscious best. Then kerosene advanced higher than ever. It will be high-minded to assume that this was a coincidence.

Coincidences have been the basis of the propelling forces of many an egregious fraud.

But the picking up of the confused outside holders' shares certainly was not conspiratory. Composure is rewarded. The insiders preserved their balance—with a cheque in hand, whilst the outsiders, unbalanced frantically jettisoned their stock. The result is that half a dozen men own the Standard Oil Company, with John D. Rockefeller's entrenchment stronger than ever. Mr. Rockefeller holds nearly one-third of the whole.

Larger Dividends Coming.

[illegible] is better than restored, [illegible] dividends or at least [illegible] be well beyond former [illegible] be assumed, though, that [illegible] be heavier, in that dividends are declared by several directors [illegible] of one directory. Individually the [illegible] total [illegible] excess of former payments [illegible] to make distribution [illegible] disburse-[illegible] were never in excess of $4[illegible] [illegible] $50,000,000. Now with [illegible] of [illegible] larger dividends may be safely and freely [illegible].

The company surplus is a staggering sum. It is conservatively estimated at $500,000,000, or about half the amount of John D. Rockefeller's personal fortune. Some day there may be a division, "on sixes" in Bourse parlance—that will take away the breath of the financial world.

The government in the attitude of an [illegible] financial feeder to the [illegible] overfed is an interesting spectacle.

COTTON ADVANCING IN ACTIVE MARKET

Current Crop Estimates Set 13,000,000 Bales as the Maximum.

By EDWARD LOW RANLETT

NEW YORK, July 27.—The cotton market has been active with prices advancing to new high levels during the last week. Crop deterioration and a strong demand for the actual staple have formed the basis of the upturn. July conditions as of date of the 25th instant will be reported on by the government on August 2 at noon.

The report will compare with 80.4 per cent. last month and 89.1 per cent. last year. Some private reports have made the loss during the month of July as high as 5 points, others under 2 points deterioration for that month. It is agreed by nearly all observers that the crop has not improved since June 25 and more recently something like a decided loss in vitality has taken place.

Situation Still Strong.

Crop records since 1891 have always shown unsatisfactory yields under existing conditions; that is to say, where the crop begins to lose ground during July. For this reason current estimates of maximum possibilities have been placed under 13,000,000 bales, or less than 190 pounds of lint cotton an acre.

The speculative situation while appearing to have lost some of its force at recent high levels is still technically strong. Heavy purchases by the world's spinners for September and October delivery of new crop contracts appear to have hardened the contract market, and besides this enormous realizing sales of speculative holdings have made the market less vulnerable to selling pressure.

Big Advance For Week.

On Monday July contracts sold at 12.04, October at 12.25, December at 12.27, January at 12.26 and May at 12.44. On the opening Friday morning or shortly after, July contracts sold at 12.00, October at 12.76, December at 12.77 and January at 12.75. This represented an advance of over $2.50 a bale for the week.

In the cotton goods division of the dry goods trade decided activity and strength [illegible]. Large sales of print cloths are reported from Fall River, with an advancing tendency in other mill products. The mills are not anxious to place contracts for their output except at prices having some relation to the value of raw material and based on contracts for new crop deliveries. Great trade activity prevails in Manchester with full demand for all classes of manufactured cotton goods.

Fertilizer Taken from Air

CHARLOTTE, N. C., July 27.—Experiments covering a period of nearly a month have demonstrated to the officials of the Southern Electro-Chemical Company that the manufacture of high-grade fertilizer from the air is entirely practical as a commercial proposition.

DYER BRINGS EXPERT IDEAS FOR SCHOOLS

Boston to Profit by Successful Industrial Training of the West

ADOPT GERMAN METHODS

Continuation School to Be One of Big Features Under New Regime.

By JOHN P. WHITMAN.

GERMANY [illegible] world in industrial training [illegible] made up of [illegible] descendants of German [illegible] the United States [illegible] training young people for [illegible] industries.

Boston [illegible] to be second in the [illegible] education engaged Dr. Franklin B. Dyer, superintendent of [illegible] to become the [illegible] in the Hub at a salary of [illegible]

It may [illegible] for the citizens of Boston [illegible] that [illegible] Dr. Dyer for the [illegible] Boston has to offer. He is to become for [illegible] years at least the director and [illegible] of the army of teachers [illegible] training nearly one hundred [illegible] future citizens. [illegible]

He is to [illegible] upon the whole town [illegible] attitude of [illegible]

Duty of United Support.

[illegible] in the West [illegible]

[illegible] in Germany [illegible] has [illegible] developed [illegible] new conditions. Boston [illegible] in line to forge ahead.

Continuation Schools.

In the meantime [illegible] look for ourselves and be prepared to understand him when he begins to talk that he may not have to waste time in simple explanations and that we may not bother the [illegible] whose time is precious to tell us what it is all about.

In the first place it will be necessary for us to know what is meant by a continuation school, for without a doubt we shall hear a great deal about continuation schools before many months elapse.

The one well developed example of a continuation school in this country is to be found in the city of Cincinnati. Two hundred and fifty boys attend this school. They are lads who have grown beyond the compulsory school age and who have gone to work in shops, stores and factories. The city of Cincinnati came to the conclusion some years ago that it had as much of a duty to perform for these poorly equipped children as it had for the younger ones.

Practical Training.

Agitation resulted in a continuation school and in many improvements connected with the regular grammar and high schools. [illegible] merchants and manufacturers have [illegible] to push forward a practical kind of education which exalts the skilled man with years of experience [illegible] and dismisses the purely theoretical academic teacher with a head full of knowledge that does not know the meaning of skill.

Most of the teachers in the continuation school are practical [illegible] The boys are taught by [illegible] and foremen who know what pays and who are [illegible] to reach the top of the industry. Every move that is made in this school makes the pupil more valuable to his employer. [illegible] in the city of Cincinnati [illegible] voluntarily [illegible] their boys a half day each week without deducting anything from their pay in order that the boys may attend for that length of time the continuation school.

Value of Industry

[illegible] It may be [illegible] history of the country [illegible] learned through the history of [illegible] Mathematics is taught [illegible] in connection with [illegible] mechanical problem that calls for fractions and [illegible] manipulations. Drawing is taught [illegible] when some plan is needed for a [illegible] desk or storage [illegible] Spelling is [illegible] but it is [illegible] with words [illegible] to designate the parts of machinery.

The boy is not told in [illegible] way that it is bad to [illegible] but he is shown that the article [illegible] will be put onto the market at a price that includes the cost of his labor. If, therefore, he has used up too much time in its making the selling price will be above what some one else can make the same article for.

Boston is not entirely without experiments analogous to [illegible] Cincinnati, but the merest beginning has been made to give to the thousands upon thousands of young boys and girls in the offices and factories the education and care that is now being expended upon the fortunate few who are on their way to college.

PILGRIMS SPLIT DOUBLE-HEADER WITH ST. LOUIS

Cards Capture First Game by 7 to 3 Score, but Lose the Second.

TYLER IN GREAT FORM

Wins Second Game for Boston, 3 to 2, Holding Visitors to Four Hits.

TO celebrate their return to the native pasture, the Pilgrims split even with the Cardinals in a double session at the Columbus avenue park yesterday, and brought joy to the souls of some 7,000 fans, who ventured out to watch the struggle and impartially cheer the struggling h[illegible] and the accession of [illegible] as announced by the score board.

The first battle of the dual seance fell to the lot of the [illegible] despite the fact that Hub Perdue, the one Boston pitcher who wins consistently, was shunted to the front in an evident attempt to win the lost love of Boston fanhood by pulling down the first game. When Perdue was shuffled aside the crowd settled back, expecting to see the home boys come to grief again, only to watch Southpaw Tyler step to the front, have one of his good days and hold the invading squad to four stingy singles and a brace of scores. As the Pilgrims meantime had chalked up a trio of counters we are thus enabled to chronicle the unusual fact—a Boston National victory.

With Perdue evidently in trim the one run which the locals squeezed across in the opening stanza of the first contest looked like a sufficient margin, but in the sixth, the Cards jumped on poor Hub like a crowd of [illegible] on an overturned fruit cart, and when the third out had been registered three big tallies had come across. [illegible] Wood's bravery went to [illegible] and evened matters up, only to have the relentless visitors pole out three more in the seventh and pile on another in the ninth. Slim Sallee officiated on the mound the greater part of the time for the visitors, and while he was not very good neither was he very bad, and would have lasted the full way had he not incurred the ire of his manager by hurling a few wide shoots in the ninth. Roger plainly showed his wrath, when Kling was passed to start this round, but his temper actually knocked him silly after two balls had been presented the next batter, and the elongated southpaw was forthwith cast into the exterior darkness, and Steele sent in to wind things up.

"Rajah" Derricks Willis.

The testy "Rajah" gave another exhibition of his spleen in the second fray, when in the second inning he applied the derrick to Willis after a couple of safeties and a double steal had made the outlook rather blue from a St. Louis standpoint.

"Rebel" Oakes was the big noise of the day with the swatstick, his hearty clouts being responsible for five of the [illegible] registrations in the initial battle, in the course of which he made four wallops, which netted a total of five bases. In the second seance he made one hit and drew a walk in addition to fanning. Jackson of the locals pulled off an equal number of hits, but his blows did not amount to as much in the final summing up, though he was directly responsible for two of the three the Pilgrims accrued in the winning rampage.

In the field all hands were up to snuff, errors being few and far between. Bill Sweeney, Hauser, Huggins and Magee took the lion's share of the applause for the frilly work.

Hit Purdue in First.

The visitors wasted no time in going after Perdue and for a moment it looked as if runs would be as thick as mosquitoes in an open air theatre. After Huggins had lofted to Jackson, Magee unhooked a two-base blow to centre, only to die the death a moment after in a foolish attempt to swipe third. Then Mowrey strolled, Konetchy hit and Evans made a full house by drawing a walk. "Hub" turned on a little smoke, and fanned Hauser and the rally was a thing of the past. The Boston side likewise was on the job. McDonald opened with a savage blast to left and eventually scored when Bill Sweeney, running true to form, produced a two-base safety, and Jackson bumped into a forceout.

Nothing materialized in the second, both sides going down in order as meekly as lambs. The hostile third opened ominously. Huggins planted a safety in centre, he pilfered at once, but was marooned, while Perdue was playing tag with the next three larrupers. McDonald made his second safe attempt in this period, but despite an er-

CARMEN VICTOR IN FOUR-CORNERED RACE

Largest Crowd in Seven Years Witnesses Bicycle Races at the Revere Track

Before 7,000 spectators, the largest crowd that has witnessed a bicycle race at Revere in seven years, Clarence Carmen of Salt Lake City won the four-cornered one-hour motor-paced race at the Revere Cycle Track last night, defeating George Wiley of Syracuse, by one lap, and Joe Nelson by one mile and five laps. Carmen covered thirty-eight miles and five laps in the hour.

Jimmy Moran, the Chelsea milkman, was forced to give up the race after he had gone four miles and six laps. He lost his pace, and seeing that he could not gain it back quite quick enough, left the track.

A Great Crowd.

Judging by the size of the crowd it seems as though cycling has gained a foothold in this city once more. The track was packed to its utmost capacity, hundreds of people being refused admission.

When the four riders lined up for the start Jimmy Moran was on the pole, with Wiley in second position, Nelson in third place and Carmen in the rear.

With the gun Carmen shot off at a terrific gait, being the first of the four to catch his motor. With four miles and six laps covered, Moran lost his pace, and seeing no chance whatever to overcome his rivals he gave up the race.

At the ten-mile mark Wiley passed Nelson and set off after Carmen. Carmen made several more attempts early in the race to pass Nelson, but the "old man" showed his heels to him on each attempt.

In the eighteenth mile Carmen made another attempt to gain a lap on Nelson, but he was stood off once more. In thirty minutes the riders had covered 19 miles and 8 laps.

Wiley Tries to Catch Up.

At this point Wiley made several attempts to catch Carmen, but each time when he was within an ace of the Salt Lake City boy he dropped back.

The race developed into an uninteresting affair until the thirty-fourth mile was reached. The Syracuse flyer started out once more again to catch his man, but Carmen rode wide and Wiley lost his pace and was still trailing Carmen at the finish.

Tom Connelly figured in two events, winning both the half-mile open and one-mile handicap amateur races. In the latter race he rode from scratch, but easily overhauled the field before the race had gone far.

The summary:

One-half Mile Open, Amateur—Won by Tom Connelly, second, John Barry, third, Frank Droback. Time, 1m. 5 2-5s.

One-half Mile Handicap, Professional—Won by Hugh McPartland, seventy-five yards, second, Saxon Williams, forty yards, third, Fred Stillman, thirty yards. Time, 1m. 15s.

One Mile Handicap, Amateur—Won by Tom Connelly, scratch, second, John Barry, fifty yards, third, Frank Droback, sixty-five yards. Time, 2m. 10 2-5s.

One-hour Motor-paced Race—Won by Clarence Carmen, thirty-eight miles five laps; second, George Wiley, thirty-eight miles four laps, third, Joe Nelson, thirty-seven miles. Moran failed to finish.

"DUFFY'S CLIFF" MAY WIN A PENNANT

RED SOX BANK BECOMES A FAMOUS ASSET

At the left is Duffy Lewis, watching an outfield fly that is headed for the cliff. At the right is Lewis headed for the ball. In the centre Lewis gets it. "Duffy's cliff" may win a pennant for the Red Sox.

IF the Red Sox win the American League championship will it be because of Duffy Lewis's "[illegible]" over the other left-fielders in playing that wonderful bank that Jimmy McAleer and John I. Taylor built in left field?

Stranger things have happened than that a mere embankment built in the outfield of a baseball park should be the turning point of a pennant race. The suggestion that that bank and Duffy Lewis's mastery of it may decide the pennant race has been made by all of the visiting American League managers and most of the players, and they have had their left fielders practice "playing the bank."

They call it "Duffy's Cliff" now, and there is a chance that "Duffy's Cliff" will become one of the baseball wonders of 1912—if the Red Sox win the pennant.

That bank and the left field "sun garden" of the new Cleveland park are the two chief natural hazards in the American League—quoting a golf term.

The Red Sox have won an average of about two of every three games they have played away from home, and that average sustained everywhere throughout the season would hardly win the pennant. It might win, but then again it would probably lose the pennant by a hair-breadth.

The Red Sox have won a much larger proportion of their home games, so that their average, at home and abroad, is a little less than seven games in ten. They have won the most of the home games by the scantiest of margins, a few runs at most.

The Red Sox outfield has furnished the defensive and offensive strength that has given them this margin.

Where the Bank Counts.

The Red Sox have won many games by virtue of the hits they have delivered into the outfield which could not be handled by the opposition. On the other hand, the Red Sox outfield have shut off many runs and have saved many baseball games by reason of the "circus" catches that they have made.

While scientific baseball playing is the principal factor in big league games, they all play it more or less. Those long outfield clouts, good for extra bases, are the ones that count in piling up runs. They beat the scientific playing of the offensive team. They "break up" baseball games.

Makes a Big Difference.

If the Red Sox should win the pennant by a margin of two or three games—which is entirely possible—there will be no doubt that that bank made the difference.

The left field fence is nearer the home plate than any of the other boundaries of Fenway Park. Many a hard-hit ball slams against it and rolls half-way back to the infield. A drive to the fence counts no more than a two-bagger, when the ball is properly handled.

Now, it happens that the fence is just near enough and just far enough from the plate so that dozens of fair balls drop close to it.

The problem is to play those balls that bound off the fence so as to lose no time in retrieving them, and to get those fly balls that drop just inside the fence.

Duffy Lewis has mastered the problem. The visiting outfielders have not.

A Vaudeville Feat.

The bank is much higher and much wider than appears from the grandstand. It is almost fifteen feet high, perpendicularly, and as wide. It is sodded at an angle of forty-five degrees. To catch a ball running up this bank, or to run for one so that one can keep his equilibrium when he strikes the bank, requires study and practice.

When Lewis first saw the bank he realized that it was up to him to get the balls that went there, so he has practiced daily all season when the Red Sox were at home playing balls that are driven to the bank or against the fence.

Nearly every game played at Fenway Park since then has given the spectators a chance to see Lewis dash for the bank, grab a fly ball in one hand and fall part way up the incline usually he lands on his back, but he always clings to the ball. It is a marvellous performance. It always brings applause. It usually prevents a score.

On the other hand, "the other fellow" cannot play the bank, and when a Sox hit goes out there it usually leads to a score.

Lewis has mastered the "natural hazard" and the visitors have not yet succeeded.

Baseball is supposed to be played on a level stretch of ground. When they make a golf course of the playing field a new problem is injected into the national sport. "Duffy's Cliff" is the new problem of the 1912 championship.

Nothing Like It Anywhere Else.

The playing of this left field embankment is the most spectacular and athletic fielding achievement in either league. There is nothing like it anywhere else in the country. It is easy to see how, in a close pennant race, the ability to "play the Fenway Park bank" would be the deciding factor.

Watch the Giants try it in the world's series—if the Red Sox figure in the world's series. Watch 'em all, for that matter, and you will understand how important that bank is.

SPEAKER'S HOME RUN WINS A TEN INNING GAME FOR RED SOX

With Two Out, the Score 3 and 3, Yerkes on First Tris Slams Out a Four-Bagger and the Bostonians Open Their Western Series With a Hard Earned Thrilling Triumph Over Pitcher "Big Ed" Walsh

CHICAGO, July 27.—Tris Speaker drove the ball over the left field fence in the tenth inning today, and the Red Sox licked the White Sox 5 to 3 in the first game of the series.

Two men were out and Yerkes was standing on first when the Boston star let go one of his vicious drives. And as the crack of the bat was heard and the ball started on its journey, 15,000 "fans" knew that the Red Sox had won another battle in their fight for a pennant.

For there was never any doubt about the destination of the ball. It rose and soared and continued to rise as [illegible] toward the fence. McIntyre, playing left because Manager Callahan was under an indefinite suspension, raced to the screen which seperated the bleacherites from the field.

He took one glance and his hands fell to his side, for he saw that the sphere would sail far over his head a would land among the fans. It did, and the Red Sox on the bench ran froom the coop, throwing their caps in the air air as Speaker trotted about the bases, preceded by Yerkes, whose claim to honor lay in the fact that he singled when two were gone that Speaker might come up and deliver his victorious clout.

Spectacular End

It was a spectacular finish to a game of thrills. And the beauty of it was that the victory went to the team which deserved to win. For it would have been a shame had "Buck" O'Brien lost his game after pitching as beautifully as he did. Five hits were the sum total secured by the White Sox, and they would never have gone into extra innings had Bill Carrigan and "Heinie" Wagner, the two veterans of the leaders played baseball as they are capable of playing it in the first inning of the first game of the Western invasion. But the catcher erred, which put two Chicago runners over the pan and placed a handicap upon Stahl's men.

The win was a grand one for the twirler who is pitching his first year in big league company, for he was opposed by Ed Walsh, the star of the Chicago pitching staff, and the honors were with the youthful star, for while he held the locals to five hits his pals drove out ten.

Gardner, with a triple and a single, and Carrigan, with two hits of the one-base breed, were the Boston lads who had least difficulty in finding the "spitters" of Walsh. Yet, the four-base clout of Speaker, which drove in two runs, and a single by Lewis, which also netted a pair of runs, were the most effective.

Crowd Sees a Rousing Game

It surely was a spectacular fight which was waged here and the conditions were just right. Fifteen thousand fans were out to welcome the White Sox home and also to gaze upon the team which they believe will win the pennant in the American League—meaning the Red Sox of Boston. Better weather could not have prevailed had Managers Stahl and Callahan been consulted.

There was just enough chill in the air to make the athletes feel like fighting, while the sun shone brightly. Callahan was compelled to make an eleventh hour switch in his line-up for the reason that he was handed a slip notifying him that he had been suspended just before the battle began.

He had a "run in" with Umpire Jack Sheridan in New York on Thursday, refusing to leave the field after he had been ordered off and the suspension was the result. Since it was of an indefinite [illegible] there is no telling when the manager will get back into the left field. Matty McIntyre was immediately sent to that station.

There were rumors of a change in the Boston line-up, too. Gardner has been suffering so greatly of boils that it was feared he would have to remain on the bench. Engle practiced at third but when the men were called to the field Gardner was among them.

The battle started with Walsh on the slab for the White Sox. And it sure was asking a lot of him to request him to start this game. He twirled a full game against the Yankees Thursday and finished one on Wednesday. So with but a day's rest he was back on the hill.

Some bad baseball in the very first put the Red Sox under a mighty heavy handicap. And Bill Carrigan "pulled it." With Rath on third, Lord on second and two gone, the latter deliberately walked down to third base. Carrigan could have made the throw and one of the two Chicagoans could have been bagged for the last out. Instead the catcher heaved to Wagner and both Rath and Lord heeled it for the plate. The German's throw was high, escaped Carrigan and both men counted.

It required some slugging on the part of the Boston lads to tie it up. In the third Carrigan and Hooper singled and, with two gone, Speaker walked, filling the bases. Lewis drove a single into left and Carrigan and Hooper came across with the runs that made it two all.

The tie was broken when the White Sox came in. With one gone Rath tripled to left and counted on Zeider's sacrifice fly. The count remained three and two until the ninth, when Gardner opened with a three-base drive to right.

PILGRIMS BREAK EVEN ON THEIR RETURN HOME

[illegible] was unable to reach the counting station.

The fourth and likewise the fifth were extremely peaceful, but in the sixth, the cover was removed, and excitement held sway. The Westerners awoke from their lethargy and before the smoke had cleared had counted three. Mowrey was thrown out on a nifty play by Sweeney for a starter. Konetchy was patient and drew a gift and Evans pushed him along with a single. Hauser's out shoved them along another peg, and both streaked in when Oakes poled out a healthy one sacker. The rescuer himself trotted across when Manager Roger shook the centre field stand with a screaming double.

Not at all dismayed, the Pilgrims chopped off a couple and were immediately running neck and neck. Sweeney as usual started it, his contribution being a single to center. Jackson followed suit, and the pair moved up. Titus laid down a perfect sacrifice. Captain Bill strolled in while Devlin was being tossed out and O'Rourke's wicked liner to centre sent Jackson over.

But the tie was short lived. "Hub" nosed into an even severer squall in the very next period and had to give up three runs before he could turn down the Cards. Magee started with a double, went to third on Mowrey's sacrifice tap, and came in on Konetchy's long fly to center. Then Evans and Hauser connected for one base blows, and the pair trotted in when Oakes pasted a double out Campbell's way. Campbell tripled after two were dead in the Boston part, but Sweeney could not get him over.

The visitors scored promptly at the start of the second clash, a walk to Huggins, a couple of outs and Konetchy's single bringing it about. The Pilgrims were balked and after handing some of the same medicine to the enemy in the second, proceeded to tie things up. Jackson and Titus singled, and then while Willis held the ball, the pair pulled off a neat double steal. This was enough of Willis, and Roger yanked him. Devlin walked, and when O'Rourke was tossed out at first, Jackson scored. Another infield tap saw Titus cut down at the plate and then Steele corraled out Tyler.

Three in a row was the program in the third. In the fourth, after retiring the visitors in order, the Pilgrims added a couple. Jackson singled, Titus doubled and the former scored when Devlin followed with a single. An error by Huggins then let the old Philadelphia star cross the platter, and ended Boston's scoring for the day.

The visitors made their other score in the seventh. Evans opened with a walk, swiped second, took third when Oakes flied to Campbell, after Hauser had whiffed, and came across on Bliss' one base ply to right centre.

In the eighth and ninth the visitors were helpless, only one reaching that Magee, who immediately started to dream of his childhood and madly imagined he had turned the wrong way after crossing first. He [illegible] for second and was a [illegible]

Tired Men

Should Try The Help of an O-P-C

An O-P-C suspensory instantly ends that tax. The comfort and relief are immediate.

Within a few days, one notes the increase in buoyancy and vim.

A month will often double one's endurance, just by saving nerve power that you waste.

We guarantee results.

The O-P-C is the scientific suspensory, famous for 20 years. Our book tells why you need it—what it does. Write for it now.

All druggists guarantee you satisfaction with an O-P-C. No. 2, Lisle, 75c—No. 3, Silk, $1.00. Mailed direct from 45 W. Twenty-Fifth Street, Chicago, if your druggist will not supply you.

Red Sox Get Busy

[illegible] that they are able to connect with the curves of Big Ed Walsh. Carrigan started the festivities with a rattling single to centre. Buck O'Brien tried to bunt, but his best effort was a weak little pop fly which Walsh easily caught. Harry Hooper evened things up by smashing a single through the box. Bath [illegible] the Chicago fans hope when he [illegible] into right field and made a great catch of Yerkes' Texas leaguer.

Walsh was afraid to take a chance [illegible] Speaker and gave the mighty Texan a free pass to first base. It was then up to Duffy Lewis and he made good with a [illegible] single to left. [illegible] Carrigan and Hooper and which tied up the score. This ended the run making for the time being.

Chicago jumped into the lead in its half of the third inning. Bath tripled with one out and scored on Zeider's sacrifice fly to Speaker.

It was then nip and tuck until the ninth inning, neither team being able to score. With Walsh working in grand form a White Sox victory appeared to be almost certain when Gardner stepped to the plate at the opening of the ninth. Larry, however, proved that he is one of the best players in the big leagues today when he hit a triple to deep right field and caused gloom to reign among the Chicago rooters. Gardner scored a minute later when Stahl sent a long fly to McIntyre.

O'Brien was the first man up for the Red Sox in the tenth and he was thrown out by [illegible]. Hooper was easy, Zeider to Walsh. With two out and nobody on the Red Sox chances didn't look any too bright.

Yerkes singled to centre.

Tris Speaker [illegible] made his way toward the plate swinging a couple of war clubs. He [illegible] selected his favorite stick and faced the mighty Walsh. Tris was as cool as an iceberg and appeared unaffected by "Big Ed's" tremendous speed.

Tris finally found one to his liking. Crash! Bang! Horsehide and ash met and the ball went sailing high into the air toward the left field bleachers. The fans jumped to their feet and they knew that the game was lost.

Again and Curlew Finish in the Van

[illegible] strong [illegible]

There was a class of sailing dories and great interest is being manifested in [illegible] as many of the young girls have taken to sailing these small crafts. The course was from off the clubhouse to buoy off Long Bridge, thence to buoy off the north-west end of Clark's Island and back to the clubhouse [illegible] and was sailed over twice.

In the 18-foot class the Again was [illegible] its own way [illegible]

In the 15-foot class there was a very close call between the Curlew and Elizabeth and Petrel, and [illegible] was anybody's race until the finish, when the Curlew got [illegible] and won by thirteen seconds, with the Petrel a minute behind.

This evening there was an illumination and dance at the clubhouse. The [illegible] and boat landing were decorated with lanterns and there was dancing until 11:30.

YOUNG OUIMET MAKES CLEANUP ON LINKS

Woodland Golfer Captures Everything in Prize Line in Big Tourney

Francis Ouimet, the young [illegible] member of the Woodland Golf Club, scooped up everything in the gross prize [illegible] in the two-day open tournament [illegible] yesterday when he finished [illegible] with a card of 7[illegible], two strokes better than his score of Friday and the whole field today.

He not only [illegible] for both days [illegible] the larger trophy for the best 36 [illegible] having 148. He was only threatened by F. H. Hoyt, who was 1[illegible].

Ouimet would not accept [illegible] three prizes, however, and modestly took the trophy for the 36-hole score and declined the gross trophies for the two days.

F. H. Hoyt thus wins the gross medal for the first day and Brice S. Evans for the second, with gross cards of 76 and 7[illegible] respectively.

The net trophies were tied for [illegible] day by George Packard, [illegible] Lawrence and Evans. The latter [illegible] the gross and [illegible] between [illegible] and Lawrence, who were [illegible] will be played off at match play [illegible] week, the winner taking the first [illegible] trophy and the loser the second [illegible]

GREAT RECORD OF SOX PITCHERS.

HERE is the remarkable standing of the five Red Sox pitching stars, and a comparison with all other American League pitchers who are credited with wins or losses in ten or more games:

	Played.	Won.	Lost.	Percent.	Standing among league pitchers.
Wood	26	20	4	.853	First.
Hall	22	15	4	.789	Third.
Collins	12	7	4	.637	Ninth.
Bedient	23	8	5	.615	Tenth.
O'Brien	21	10	*	.556	Fifteenth.

Leaders' Batting Falls Off but the Star Twirlers Stand Firm as a Rock

HAVE the Red Sox fallen into a slump? Have they started on a toboggan, like the White Sox did before them and like they did themselves about this time last year?

That is the question "fans" asked yesterday when the Sox opened their Western campaign at Chicago.

This frightful suggestion crept into the cold gray matter of Bostonians like a burglar slips into your flat near early dawn, and created much the same effect.

The aforesaid Bostonians who are astonishingly liberal with their applause for the other side—when their own team wins—regretted, first, that they had cheered Vean Gregg in the early innings [illegible] game, and second that they [illegible] Stonewall Jackson [illegible] before. Now, if they hadn't been so eager [illegible] maybe Cleveland wouldn't have won those two games!

Melancholy Jacques McAleer, thus [illegible] for purposes of this story, took train for Chicago with this burden on his mind. Like many another victory hath made Jeems sorrowful.

Having the bunting (vernacular for the American League pennant) fairly within his grasp, what if he should lose it? Horrible!

Much better to be so far down in life that you can't go any further in that direction. Then you can be cheerful for, by any indiscretion of the Fates, you can't possibly lose. Happy the man who can't lose. Wherefore the optimistic tramp.

Where Are Those Mighty Clouts?

The Sox have not hit the ball lately. They're batting less and less every day. Where are those steamers that Tris Speaker used to deliver to the outer gardeners in the olden days when the Red Sox were playing second hand to the other fellows? What has become of that California squint Harry Hooper once fixed on the ball so carefully and so accurately that trained athletes kept in training running after his drives alone? Where are those clouts Duffy Lewis once upon a time administered to a yielding hide? Why hire a lad outside the grounds to chase the ones Jake Stahl, in the ancient days, deposited there?

How about those three-bagging sizzlers "Heinie" Wagner once slammed? Also the mighty wallops Bill Carrigan once upon a time slapped into the far corners?

All, all are gone. Now we knock no pitchers out of the box in a figurative sense. When we dispose of disagreeable flingers—if we dispose of them at all—we do it in a literal way; witness, Tris Speaker knocking Pitcher Blanding off the hillock by steaming one into his mitts! There was a time when Speaker accomplished the same purpose by driving the ball over the fence. Now, if he removes the pitcher hence at all, it is by dint of a mighty swat that knocks him down.

All [illegible] thoughts crept, freezing through Melancholy Jacques' brain yesterday, as he sat in the Great Northern Hotel [illegible] forlorn like, and mused upon the dark side of pennant winning. The same ruminations wandered through the [illegible] of Jake Stahl's managerial greyhounds.

Aha! The Pitchers!

But while there is life there is hope. And when a baseball team is at the top there is always some chance of keeping it at the top.

The pitchers! Sure enough. What if Hooper, and Speaker, and Lewis, and Stahl, and Wagner, and Carrigan have lost control of their mighty bludgeons?

What if the old three-baggers and home runs and double-digit scores have gone? Why worry? What's the use of runs, anyway, if you can win baseball games without them? We lost two games without runs when all we needed was two in each game [illegible] in front.

We lost 1 to 0 to the White Sox and 1 to 0 to the "Naps." Outside of that we're all right.

All Depends on the Pitchers.

It is these pitchers who will see the Red Sox through the battle, if anybody does. If they keep on pitching six-hit and seven-hit games and holding the opposition to five or six runs in a series, nobody need fret about the hitting. And it looks like the pitchers will keep right on that way.

Jake Stahl is blessed with five of them—O'Brien, Wood, Hall, Bedient and Collins. They are named in that order because that is the way Stahl likes to use them. Once in a while he has to move them up, because once in a while somebody falls by the wayside.

Usually each one pitches a game a week, then two games a week, then a game a week. And as long as they can divide their work that way they'll hold out.

Joe Wood has won the amazing total of twenty games and lost but four. He did not drop a game during the long session at home. His average is .853. He leads the American League.

Wood Leads Slabmen.

Five pitchers have clear records, but four of them have pitched but one game and the fifth appeared in two contests. [illegible] Joe Wood is the most successful pitcher in the league—by far.

Eddie Plank is next to Wood. Plank has won fourteen games and lost three, with an average of .811. Jack Coombs has won fifteen and lost five; Walter Johnson, "the Terrible Swede," has won eighteen and lost seven, being victor in two less games than Wood and having lost three more than the Kansas Cyclone." "Big Ed" Walsh, touted as the greatest of all, has won sixteen and lost eleven. Why call him the greatest?

Returning to the Red Sox corps, Charley Hall is third in the league, with fifteen victories and four defeats, an average of .789. The others who have pitched ten games or more rate thus: Coombs, fourth; Dubuc, Detroit, fifth; Johnson, sixth, Hughes, Washington, seventh, Lange, Chicago, eighth, and then Ray Collins, who has won seven and lost four for the Red Sox.

Next after Collins in the league race comes Bedient with eight games won and five lost.

No Reason to Be Mournful.

Following Bedient are Gregg, eleventh, Walsh, twelfth, [illegible], thirteenth, Bender, fourteenth, and O'Brien, fifteenth, with ten victories and eight defeats, "Buck's" average being .556.

Thus the Red Sox have five pitchers who have won more games than they have lost and four of the five figure among the most successful pitchers in the league, while the fifth, O'Brien, is getting better all of the time, [illegible] in the past month has averaged [illegible] as well as any of them.

Now can you beat that?

Sure enough, the Red Sox added a sting to their batting slump, or falling to pieces in the field last week, but they made a quick recovery, and while they lost a game of their lead during the week, they had gained that game within a few days before, so they started on their western trip with no reason for anybody to be mournful.

Bay Views Defeat the St. Eulalias By 1 to 0

The Bay Views of South Boston defeated the St. Eulalia team of South Boston, 1 to 0 in a tough game, on the M street playgrounds, South Boston, before a crowd of 1,500 people. It was one of the greatest games of the season, both pitchers performing in fine style.

Ross, pitcher for the St. Eulalias, was the star, allowing the winners but four hits, but [illegible] beat him. The score:

Jamaica Plain K. of C. Team Winner, 5 to 0

The Jamaica Plain K. of C. team triumphed over the Mount Pleasant Knights in a spirited diamond battle at Franklin Field yesterday afternoon, by a score of 5 to 0. The Jamaica Plain nine displayed its old time speed and batting ability and was never in danger of defeat.

The feature of the game was the pitching of Reardon for the Jamaica Plain Knights. Maxwell and Moragn gave a grand exhibition of fielding for the winners. B. Donovan did the best work for the losers. The score:

Bennetts Trimmed by So. Boston White Sox

Before one of the biggest crowds of the season, the Bennett A. A. champions of Somerville, went down to defeat before the South Boston White Sox by a score 3 to 1. The game was a pitchers' battle between Benson and Martes, the Sox pitcher having a shade, keeping his hits well scattered. King won the game in the first inning, driving out a home run with two men on base. The fielding of Flaherty for the White Sox and Yates for the losers were the features. The Bennets tried hard to win, but were outclassed. The score:

Man Cannot Beat Nature!

Can you get a better covering for an egg than its shell? Or a better air-ship than a bird? Or a better protection for tobacco than the NATURAL LEAF wrapper—nature's OWN protection—as against wax paper, tin foil or tin cans?

This natural protection is possible only in "plug tobacco." It therefore keeps its natural flavor, original moisture, BETTER than tobacco in ANY OTHER FORM. So of course—you get the sweetest, coolest, smoothest smoke or chew.

Don't fly in the face of Nature and pay for fancy covers that are more expensive and not as good as Nature's own!

AN OLD CAR PROBLEM.

Denver Doctor Says Not to Tinker With Auto.

Dr. A. C. Stewart of Denver, Col., who is a very enthusiastic motorist, having owned cars practically since the beginning of the industry, claims to have solved the problem of what to do with the old car. His solution is to drive it. In proof of this theory he is at present engaged in making a tour from Denver which before its completion will take him through over half of the States in the United States and will aggregate about 7,000 miles.

Dr. Stewart recently made his first visit to the Locomobile factory, although he has been a Locomobile owner for a good many years, his present car being a 1908 car.

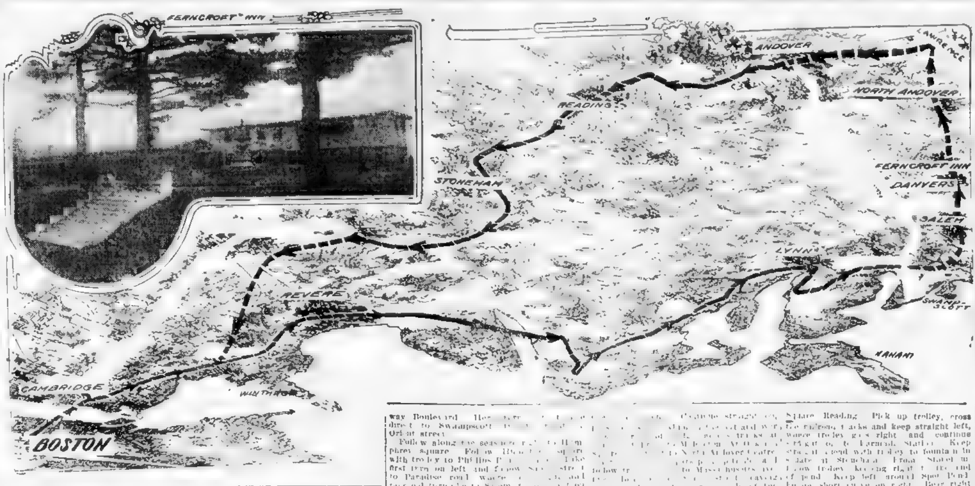
In speaking of it he said: "I have frequently been asked by owners of cars how I have managed to keep my car running so consistently and so well for such a number of years and I have always answered the question by stating that my success was due to two reasons. In the first place, when I purchased a car I purchased one which I knew was properly constructed. The second reason is that I have never tinkered with it.

"During the last four years I have driven my car between 85,000 and 90,000 miles, which I think is a very fair record for a 20-horsepower car driven by the owner. On the present trip, during the last month I have covered about 2,700 miles and I expect that before I reach San Diego, which is the ultimate point of my tour, that counting side trips and detours it will cover at least 4,000 miles more, which will bring my mileage pretty close to the 95,000 mark."

Lolly Appointed.

The Remy Electric Company, Anderson, Ind., makers of the Remy magneto, announces the appointment of W. H. Lolly, of London, Eng., as an engineer in the service of the department. Mr. Lolly is well known in America. On his arrival in the States he joined the forces of the Remy Electric Company and later became one of the staff of the Connecticut Shock Absorber Company, remaining there until his return to the Anderson factory.

ALONG NORTH SHORE TO LAWRENCE



A Sat[urday] [illegible] trip that combines the delights of the North Shore and a trip inland to the Merrimac Valley is that mapped [illegible] the AMERICAN in today's issue. It carries one from Boston along the Revere Boulevard to Lynn, through historical Salem and Danvers and the famous Ferncroft Inn, to Lawrence. The return for the most part is over State highways and combines the scenery of the seashore and the country.

USE CAR DYNAMO TO ILLUMINATE SHOP

Cole Agent Hits Upon Novel Plan to Fit an Emergency.

The rapid growth of the C. E. & H. J. Habich Company, Massachusetts distributors for the Cole, recently necessitated a larger service station. A four-story reinforced concrete building was immediately put in process of erection. Although it was being constructed in record time, it was not fast enough for Messrs. Habich, so they moved in before the roof was on, the interior finished or lights installed.

Late one afternoon several rush jobs came in, and although a corps of mechanics are employed it became necessary to work that evening in order to maintain their enviable reputation of giving the best of service and not having one dissatisfied Cole owner.

Ever [illegible] to meet emergencies Henry Habich, who is in charge of the service station, thought but a moment, and directed [illegible] in wiring a series of lamps and connecting them with the Ward Leonard dynamo lighting system with which the Cole cars are equipped. Result: twenty-five sixteen candlepower lamps brilliantly illuminated the shop, as though [illegible] of the mighty power stations whose work they were performing.

NEW SERVICE STATION.

Universal Motor Truck Co. Locate in Pleasant Street.

The New England Branch of The Universal Motor Truck Company, which has heretofore been doing business at 883 Boylston street, will on August 1 combine its business and service building at 183 to 191 Pleasant street.

Manager Charles A. Malley states that he is installing a complete workshop and garage and equipping same with a full stock of all parts of Universal trucks. Already Universal trucks are coming to be a familiar sight on the streets of Boston and neighboring cities and the fast growing demand for these trucks in this section is but a repetition of the success which the Universal Truck Company have scored in other large cities.

Velie Truck Owners Found in Every State

Several Hundred Owners Among Large Corporations and Small Merchants.

Manager Fred Bradfield of the Velie Boston branch has just received from his factory a list of Velie truck owners in the United States that gives an idea of the wide scope of merchants and manufacturers that have [illegible] horse-drawn vehicle and do their transportation with the commercial truck. The list shows [illegible] every State [illegible] California.

"We have been building trucks slightly over a year, yet the demand for this line, backed up by the power of service and satisfaction [illegible]," says Manager Bradfield. "[illegible] the test against [illegible] field of competition [illegible] our best advertiser. We argue justly that the Velie trucks have a stronger and more durable chassis than any on the market.

"Right here in New England the sales of the Velie trucks have been remarkable. We have scores of them whizzing around the streets of Boston, while in Maine and New Hampshire they are doing valiant work in living up to the standard set by the Velie Company."

Race Dead Heat on Circular Track

Nikrent, Driving a Case, and Endicott in Schacht, Finish Hood to Hood.

For the first time in the history of automobile racing on a circular dirt track a dead heat was run at Kansas City, when the Case car, driven by Joe Nikrent of Los Angeles, and the Schacht, driven by Bill Endicott, crossed the finishing line running hood to hood.

The officials, who were well known members of the Automobile Club of Kansas City, under whose auspices the big meet was staged, said after the race had been finished that of the three judges and three [illegible] who saw the finish not a one could determine which car was entitled to the money.

The distance nominated was one mile with a flying start with Endicott in the pole position. Nikrent got a bad start but his Case car was working perfectly. [illegible] mechanic had neglected to [illegible] down the cap on his gasoline tank [illegible] which gave Nikrent a chance to catch up.

[illegible] fought it out on the turns and came into the home stretch again running neck-and-neck. Nikrent gained a lead of about two feet on the second turn of the mile and held it to the finish.

As the Case machine crossed the line a winner the 10,000 spectators gave Nikrent a mighty cheer and his comrades on the Case racing team carried him from the track to the paddock on their shoulders.

No Radical Changes in Stoddard-Dayton

Improvements in the 1913 Cars Are Solely in Nature of Refinements.

Rounding out a season of marked success with every model, the line of Stoddard-Dayton cars for 1913 has been announced to the trade. With minor mechanical refinements that have been dictated by service, the 1913 line will continue four highly successful models of the past season, with the six-cylinder Stoddard-Dayton Silent Knight as the leader, offered with an option of wire wheels.

Having combined chassis of the most advanced design with examples of Stoddard-Dayton body and coach work which have established a fine prestige for the Dayton shops, the new production is certain to be sought by dealers more eagerly than in any previous year.

Three distinct types of power plants, each having withstood every demand of vigorous service, are represented in the new line and the choice of body styles not only includes standard types but a number of bodies which are unusual and original, permitting the dealer to meet almost any preference or fancy of the prospective buyer.

The line consists of the Stoddard-Dayton Knight Six, built as a touring car, limousine and compartment roadster; the Stoddard Dayton "48," with valve-in-head motor, built as touring car, limousine and compartment roadster; the Stoddard Dayton "38," with block motor, built as a touring car, compartment roadster, coupe, limousine and landaulet, and the Stoddard-Dayton "30," with block motor, built as a touring car and compartment roadster.

Such improvements as have been made for 1913 are solely in the nature of refinements. No radical change has been made, although there are numerous details which have been modified to simplify driving and promote comfort. In this respect the new cars will be characterized by a number of new features showing how thoroughly the makers have assured the owner's comfort and enjoyment.

Self-Starter Is Given Hard Test

[illegible] car has come to the forefront in London, England, in a manner somewhat startling and certainly very significant. The most recent achievement of the Detroit-made car was a remarkable demonstration of the efficiency of its electric cranking device, a test which proved to be as spectacular as the standardization test of some time ago when the parts of three cars were mixed up in three different piles and then three whole cars built from these parts.

The self-starting test, word of which has just been received, was made difficult by the fact that the cars used were taken from crates that had been standing on the docks for eighty days and each car was started 1,000 times. Both the standardization and the self-starting tests were conducted by the Royal Automobile Club, the most authoritative body of its kind in Europe.

Fine Touring in Yellowstone Park

A [illegible] physician, Dr. [illegible] Austin, declares that the Yellowstone Park is the finest touring district in America. The doctor gets into the "See America First" campaign with a vengeance. Austin in a Marion car of 1910 vintage has just completed the round trip between his city and the borders of the big National reserve.

"It was a joy ride except for forty miles, when I had to use low speed continuously," says the doctor.

Austin agrees with Senator W. B. Heyburn of Idaho that legislation should be enacted to provide for motor traffic in the big park itself. The Idaho Senator has just introduced such a resolution into Congress. Objection has always been made that auto traffic would interfere with the safe use of horse-drawn vehicles. Many of the other national parks now allow autos in their confines. Glacier Park was recently opened to them.

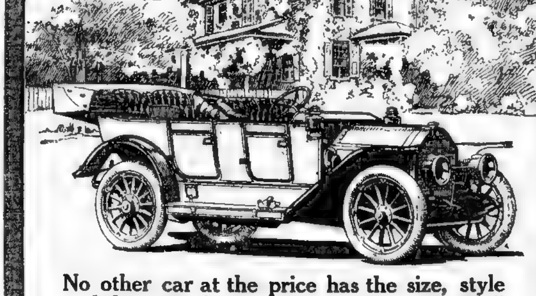
1913 Stoddard-Dayton "48" 1913



No other car at the price has the size, style and luxury of the Stoddard-Dayton "48"

THE "48" has no competitor, with an established place in Motordom, at nearly its price. It is one of the models which has built the enviable reputation of Stoddard-Dayton cars—which demonstrated that it is unnecessary to pay more than $2800 for a car of real quality.

The "48" is built for comfort, beauty and serviceability—its body is roomy, its lines graceful and modern. Deep upholstery, long wheelbase and springs, powerful and quiet motor are features to which Stoddard-Dayton "48" owners point with pride and admiration.

A car which can be produced consistently for nine years, progressing steadily as new refinements and conveniences were adopted, is the kind of a car which you want to own.

DELIVERIES NOW: We are able to make delivery of touring car and roadster models at once. We have a full line of models on exhibition at our show rooms, and if you will telephone or write we will be pleased to send a car for you.

The specifications and equipment of the Stoddard-Dayton "48" include: 123-inch wheelbase; 36x4½ tires; Q. D. demountable rims; selective transmission; gas head lights and tank; Hartford shock absorbers; powerful brakes; ignition system with starter button; mohair top and boot; storm curtains, windshield, all tools.

GEATEST OUTPUT TO COME IN 1913

Detro't Predictions Are That It Will Be Banner Year in History of Industry.

By J. C. KERRISON.

DETROIT, July 27—The celebration of Cadillaqua has come and gone. Detroit has made new history for herself and after a week of festivities in which she entertained hundreds of thousands from other cities and States has again settled down to the old routine of business that has made her fully as famous the world over as could any long series of festivities and rejoicings.

Throughout the ceremonies the motor industry was decidedly prominent, and the motor car parade of Tuesday afternoon, and the grand pageant of Thursday evening, served but to emphasize to the country at large the greatness of that industry, and what it has done for Detroit and what Detroit has done for the industry.

Cadillaqua was a success in every way, shape and manner, and with each succeeding year will grow in greatness. The representatives of the motor world were in the city during the week and from what was heard on all sides it is easy and safe to predict that the season of 1913 will be a banner one and that more cars will be built and sold in that season than in any one previous year in the history of the industry.

Glidden Tour Pathfinder.

Just at the present time there is considerable talk anent the Glidden tour and the work of the pathfinder car, a Flanders electric which leaves here next Monday on its work of laying out the route to be followed by the contestants in the tour of next October. This securing of the [illegible] work of an electric vehicle was a general surprise and while various comments [illegible], all agree that the Flanders will make good on the job on general principles and from the fact that neither Flanders nor Roy Pelletier have ever yet made failures.

The [illegible] explo[illegible] under [illegible] and is [illegible] [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] have been [illegible] and advocated [illegible] as far as the [illegible] is concerned the contest committee [illegible] selecting, leaving the matter [illegible] in the hands of [illegible] West[illegible] and his crew. [illegible] to my mind will be selected [illegible] carry the [illegible] from Detroit to Fort Wayne, Indian[illegible] Nashville, Tuscaloosa [illegible] Jackson and into New Orleans. This I am convinced will be the [illegible] and the greater portion of [illegible] offers great possibilities in the preaching of the gospel of good roads and [illegible] of motor vehicles.

The pathfinder trip will demonstrate be[illegible] the value of the electric for [illegible] as well as city uses, but this task is so much out of the ordinary [illegible] plans will be adopted for its success.

Louis Sackett in Detroit.

Accompanying the pathfinder will be an Everett car, which will carry an extra set of batteries which can readily be loaded on the pathfinder, renewing its motive power, which will be equivalent to the taking on of gasoline by a gas car. Means of recharging batteries will be provided at various points along the route, [illegible] known that in certain sections of the territory to be selected electric motor cars are unknown. There is no doubt but what interesting history will be made on this trip.

The motor manufacturers of the country are now almost ready to send out their new models and within a few weeks [illegible] will have made their bow for the [illegible] season. The general characteristics of these models have already been spoken of at greater or less length in the AMERICAN.

Louis J. Sackett, the retail sales manager of the Boston Oakland branch, has been in town all week looking over the Oakland line, with which he is thoroughly delighted, and says is one of the best ever, and Sackett ought to know. He has been in the industry since its inception, and is familiar with motors from Alpha to Omega.

PICTURESQUE TOUR THROUGH 'ARCADIA'

New Yorker Discovers Charming Motor Route in "Land of Evangeline."

The latest discovery in the field of remote and picturesque motor touring routes has been made by E. H. Greene of Amsterdam, N. Y., who with a party of four, penetrated the region celebrated in Longfellow's "Evangeline" and traversed the forests of Nova Scotia, part of the distance over roads that are regarded as impassable in the Summer.

Starting from Yarmouth the party visited the coast settlements, where the French inhabitants retain the customs and traditions of the eighteenth century. A run through the Annapolis valley brought the tourists to within a few miles of the home of the Acadians.

At Port Mulgrave the car was ferried across the Cape Breton, plunging into the wilderness. The car, a Packard Six, carried the explorers over old logging trails which the natives looked upon as too rough and rocky for horses and oxen.

In the interior a puzzling state of affairs was encountered. Laws have been enacted in several counties forbidding automobiles to run on public highways on certain days. The shock suffered by the backwoods men and their live-stock on the infrequent appearance of an automobile is too severe to be undergone except at times set apart for such desecration of the solitude. Since there is no way for a tourist to learn the forbidden days, he is likely to be stopped at any turn of the road.

The party returned to the coast at Portland, Me.

MOTOR FIRE TRUCKS.

Apparatus Valued at Million Dollars in One Month.

A national movement that is [illegible] widespread interest among municipalities says F. H. Sawyer, head of the motor fire truck tire department of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio, "and one which has received quite a little attention by the press, is the adoption of motor driven apparatus for fire department service.

"One authority states that one hundred and sixty-six machines, aggregating $1,-600,000 were ordered or delivered during the month of May, and the New York Times in a recent article states that not [illegible] $7,000,000 worth of motor driven fire apparatus will be purchased within the next ten years.

Motor driven fire apparatus weighs four or five times as much as the average touring car and the combination of excessive weight and high speed produces severe strains that must be properly provided for. [illegible] straight side tire will withstand these strains far better than one of the clincher type, as the straight side tire will not rim-cut, whereas the excessive strains which are concentrated on the hook of the clincher rim will cause the clincher type to deteriorate much more quickly.

An Electric Farm.

The electric farm is the latest thing to bring out the wonderful progress made in the use of electricity and to prove its diversified advantages. This unique institution is located in the outskirts of Boston and operated by the Boston Edison Company. With the installation, the other day of a two ton G-M-C electric truck, its title to the name "Electric Farm" is in [illegible].

Electricity does everything on this up-to-the-minute establishment. It cuts the fodder, milks the cows, washes the dishes, pumps the water, churns the butter and finally takes the product of the farm to the city in an electric truck. It is thoroughly electrified and is attracting considerable attention, for thousands of Boston people visit the farm every week.

Long Trip Ended.

Bert Smith of Los Angeles on Friday finished in New York a transcontinental trip in a Locomobile that has been on the way for about two months. No attempt was made at a record, the trip being undertaken in the interest of a national highway. Arrangements were made on the way with civic organizations of towns on the line of this highway.

Another Time to Keep Mouth Shut

Speed King Advises It When Car Is Going Over Seventy Miles an Hour.

"When you're in a racing car at speed, keep your mouth tight shut." This is the advice given by "Fighting Bob" Evans of the Studebaker team, whose successes this year have stamped him as the brightest star of the light-car pilots. And it is advice which will be endorsed by every experienced race driver.

"Keep your mouth shut," [illegible] Evans, "because you will want to [illegible] now and then.

"Opening the mouth makes breathing easy, it is true. But the extreme speed of a motor car will keep you inhaling for a long time after you want to stop if you try to do it through the mouth. The pressure will cram your lungs, mouth and [illegible] passages [illegible] choke and strangle.

"We had a [illegible] morning this Spring [illegible] course for practice. The wind was blowing fifty miles an hour, according to the weather reports. On one [illegible] we faced it squarely. The [illegible] down to a speed of seventy-five miles an hour [illegible] doing eighty-five [illegible] added to drive the speed [illegible] headwind of 125 [illegible] hour. [illegible] wind? Why the roar in my ears [illegible] ring for days afterwards. The [illegible] on my shoulders was greater than [illegible] could have [illegible] back on [illegible] so that my [illegible]

"Charley B[illegible], my mechanician, leaned over toward me and started to [illegible] something. [illegible] moment he [illegible] up and nearly [illegible] I thought he was sick and stopped the car as soon as I could. When he got through choking and coughing he said [illegible] the torture of drowning.

"He'd started to [illegible] about the weather, I guess, and the pressure of the wind had [illegible] almost to the bursting point. He tried to gasp it out and got more air [illegible] down his throat. He was frank [illegible] that I saved his life by stopping [illegible] I did.

"Of course, that was worse than [illegible] usually gets. [illegible] that the only time in a big road [illegible] when the driver and mechanic of a car do any talking, is on the turns, when the car is slowed down. At anything more than seventy miles an hour a man takes chances when he opens his mouth. Above ninety miles an hour, the result is sure to be serious."

American Tires Abroad.

"One element that contributes to the likelihood of a shortage of tires in this country is that in addition to the always increasing requests for casings to use on our own cars, the foreign demand for American made tires is growing rapidly, too," says J. C. Matlack of the Ajax tire concern. "The situation thus created is keeping the factories going full force.

"It is natural to expect that the countries near us, such as Canada, Mexico and Cuba, as well as our own possessions, Porto Rico and Hawaii, should turn to American made tires. And in addition the great number of American tourists in Europe taking their own cars abroad, is another reason for the increased popularity of American casings there.

"The actual service they give is realized by the foreigners, who in turn want to avail themselves of it. The growth of a fine export business has been the result as far as Ajax tires are concerned and of [illegible] with many others."

In Far-Away Russia

Remy magnetos are now providing the vital sparks to fire the charges in the cylinders of two Nyberg cars in which Count Nicholas Konsnetsoff is driving in St. Petersburg, Russia. The Russian nobleman is an auto enthusiast and after reading of the Nyberg in the American trade papers cabled his order for a 6-60 four-passenger roadster and 4-40 five-passenger touring car. The Remy magneto is standard equipment on the Nyberg. Duplicate cars of these two models will be entered in the second annual four States tour which leaves Indianapolis, July 9, 1912, for a sixteen-day swing through Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky and Indiana.

Willys-Overland Has Most Successful Year Since Organized.

With an actual total production of 20,-345 cars for the 1912 season, the Willys-Overland Company, Toledo, Ohio, finishes, August 1, its most [illegible] since the organization of [illegible] under [illegible] guiding hand of [illegible] Willys the Overland [illegible] meteoric career [illegible] in a secure position [illegible] in production of motor cars.

From January 1 of this year to the middle of [illegible] Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, manufacturers of the no-rim-cut tire, has placed on the market 450,000 tires, and by the end of the year, P. W. Litchfield, the factory manager, estimates his output will reach 1,000,000 tires.

"This," says Mr. Litchfield, "means that the Goodyear company will produce one-fourth of the [illegible] entire output."

Reo Echo Now Out.

With their usual vigor and unusual knack for doing things R. M. Owen & Company have just issued the Summer number of the Reo Echo. It is a beautiful 7x10 [illegible] pages filled with fine [illegible] motoring and bright half tones [illegible] grandeur [illegible] of America. Among the articles [illegible] by writers of national [illegible] "The Growth of the Motor Car [illegible] Automobile as a Solution [illegible] Problem," "The Best Motor Truck [illegible] its Place in the Commercial World Today." Wit, humor, science and [illegible] also come in for their just share in [illegible] exhibit. A limited number of [illegible] some brochures are being [illegible] R. M. Owen & Company, 17 [illegible] New York, to readers of the AMERICAN.

Points for Motorists.

In fitting an inner tube care should be taken that nothing remains in the envelope. [illegible] not infrequently suffer criticism for supplying inferior tubes when the [illegible] it is the motorist who is at fault. The Michelin Tire expert says [illegible] frequently owners leave dust caps [illegible] and other articles inside and [illegible] and then complain when the inner [illegible] punctures from "no apparent cause" after a few miles of traveling. Keep dust caps and other parts removed for tire fitting [illegible] a bit of waste on the step or [illegible] of the car or in some other place [illegible] can be found when wanted [illegible] the tire by [illegible] chance.

L. J. Sackett Now Oakland Manager

Former Sales Manager of Cadillac Co. of Boston Is Pioneer In Automobile Industry.

Louis J. Sackett, one of the pioneer salesmen in the automobile industry, has been appointed manager of the Oakland Motor Company of this city, and is now in Detroit looking over the 1913 Oakland line.

Mr. Sackett has been connected with the automobile industry for fourteen years, for in 1898 he went to work as a mechanic for C. H. Metz, who was then getting out the Orient [illegible]. He took part in a number of endurance contests in 1902. He drove a Fournier Searchmont from New York to Boston, which at that time was regarded quite a [illegible].

Before-Stock-Taking Sale of Women's Summer Apparel

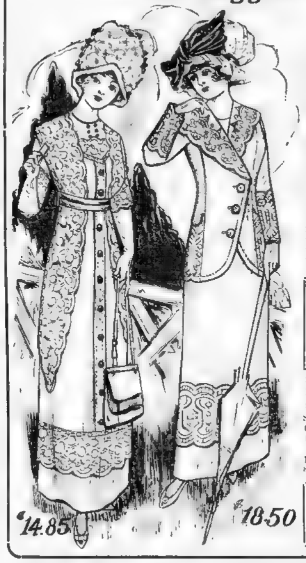
The Biggest Merchandise Sensation of the Year!



THESE SEMI-ANNUAL SALES HAVE BECOME a permanent and famous feature of Boston garment retaildom. At each sale we endeavor to surpass the standards of former years. Each year we aim to give bigger and better bargains. As a result the SEMI-ANNUAL BEFORE-STOCK-TAKING SALE has grown to be a factor in the diary of careful, economical shoppers [illegible] waited and watched for. Tomorrow we shall launch this sale on a larger scale than ever before: bargains will be offered that will make folks who read wonder and folks who see marvel! If you get here early in the day you will, of course, have first choice of the best, though there are bargains enough, and good ones, to last until Stock Taking on Wednesday night.

REVERE

Squire REAL ESTATE Trust IS SELLING AT

PINES RIVERBANK

House and Bungalow Lots $150 to $350. $25 Down, $5 a Month

PINES RIVERBANK IS LOCATED in the most desirable part of REVERE, bordering the cities of MALDEN, CHELSEA and LYNN, affording transportation facilities in all directions nearly every minute in the day.

As the LOTS are LARGE, ranging from 4,000 to 8,000 square feet, one does not have to buy two or three upon which to place a house. Land rich for garden crops.

TO BOSTON 10 MINUTES (When the New Boston and Western R. R. is Completed) TO LYNN 5 MINUTES

The largest manufacturing industries in the East, we believe, are to be located in the vicinity of and in close proximity to "Pines Riverbank"—such as will demand hundreds and thousands of houses, assuring the purchaser of a lot here a profit upon the investment.

To our customers we make this statement:

We point with pride to Court Park, Winthrop, where we sold 176 lots in 24 hours aggregating $140,000, and where the purchasers have averaged a profit of $[illegible] invested in Squire's Lakeside Terrace and Squire's Garden, Arlington, where we have sold $200,000 worth, nearly every lot to residents of Arlington, or Cambridge and Somerville, which the land adjoins; to Squire Park, where we have sold more than $[illegible]. As an investment or home proposition, the Pines Riverbank Land is in the same class as above, and we recommend it highly.

Robbins Hill

"HEALTHIEST SPOT WITHIN A FIVE CENT FARE"

ARLINGTON

This is the finest town in New England for investment TODAY. Arlington is making the building trades hum. Come out and see this beautiful hill, noted for its pretty homes, its grand views, its high, dry, healthy location and its famous Robbins Springs. Physicians recommend high altitudes and the business man here finds renewed vigor in sleeping where the air is dry and pure, free from dust and humidity. Come out today. You cannot afford to wait if you are looking for an investment in a healthy, value-rising neighborhood. Gray Street Boulevard, accepted by the town, runs through property and commands a beautiful view of the Arlington and Lexington valleys. When completed this will make one of the most beautiful drives in New England. Proposed Belmont line, connecting Arlington, Belmont and Waverley will increase values 500%. Cambridge Subway brings this property within 28 minutes of Boston by train 17 minutes. Only four minutes to electrics, stores and schools.

LOTS SEVEN CENTS A FOOT.

(easy terms, 10% off for cash) restricted to one or two-family houses. Money to build. Over three-fourths of the lots already sold to a desirable class of home-seekers. There's Always a Way Out.

By HERBERT KAUFMAN.

(Copyright, 1912, by Herbert Kaufman.)

There's always a way out, but doubt can't find it. Fear is blind in the dark. Only the light of courage can penetrate gloom.

Every labyrinth has its path to safety. If Alexander hadn't cut the Gordian knot, some man would have untied it. Tangles are only hopeless to panicky fingers.

What are your problems compared with the terrific mysteries that challenged your fathers? You can teach yesterday everything but tenacity. The past rises from a crude but glorious grave to strengthen purpose and urge enterprise.

Centuries of unrelenting dares wrought out of chaotic ignorance the tools and rules which made possible the wizardry of science, the splendor of learning and the might of modern industry.

Shackled by feudalism, thwarted by special privilege, brutalized by despotism, and cowed by bigotry, the primitive peoples sundered handicap after handicap, achieved out of their necessities the weapons and engines and implements which stood ready at hand for your entry into life.

There was a time when a thousand miles meant a year's journey—there was an hour when another continent was as the distance to the nearest star—there was an age when the oar was supreme upon the seas—when the chariot meant the ultimate in speed—when it took a ton of bricks to record a chapter of history—when incantation was the best accepted medical practice.

And yet Civilization, served by such inept devices, stepped onward to a higher destiny.

Throw yourself back a thousand years and imagine your difficulties staged in the barbarous theatre of that hard epoch; consider how grinding and binding were common circumstances then, and, in the realization of the better lot which graces every present life, take a new hope and fight your little bothers through.

You have no cause to despair. You have a thousand inspirations for confidence. Your hands are not tied—your soul is not pawned—your liberty is not enslaved. You're a freedman, a competent, independent sovereign, denied no avenue nor opportunity which any fellow has occupied.

There are no walled towns—no sentries guard the gates—the highways are free—the roads are clear. Go on! No power can check you so long as ambition still surges and will urges.

You are not indentured. You can change your place and your pace. Before you stretches the empire of Do-as-You-Please.

There are no doors to shut you in nor hold you out. The Giants are at your service, ready with wire and wheel to turn any plan into reality.

If you fail, it is because you quail. Helplessness exists only where hopelessness persists.

TRANSFERS IN NORTH END REAL ESTATE LEND ACTIVE HELP TO THE OFF SEASON

The activity of the realty market, which has marked the past five weeks, continued during the week in the sale of well known properties. The estate at the corner of Canal, Market and Friend streets, North End, numbered 32-46 Canal street and 129-139 Friend street, consisting of 17[illegible] feet and four brick buildings, was purchased by the Boston Real Estate Trust. This is one of the largest sales [illegible] for many years. The [illegible] $317,100 of which $25,000 is o[illegible]

Another important [illegible] section was the sale of [illegible] building Nos. 174-176 [illegible] and No. 1[illegible] Fulton street. It [illegible] the best [illegible] the city and is assessed [illegible]

The dedication [illegible] factory building by the W[illegible] Building Associates is an [illegible]. The movement [illegible] began four or [illegible] when it was found that W[illegible] was wanting in factory buildings and the stockholders in this association are extensively composed of Waltham [illegible]. At the dedication many representative citizens took part in the exercises and among them was W. W. Stall of the Factory Exchange of Boston.

Small properties in the South End as well as D[illegible] and Roxbury, have brought [illegible] in the sales of the week. At the West End, investment property is in [illegible] demand. The sale of Nos. 42-46 [illegible] street during the week, and No. [illegible] Leme street, taxed for $56,501, is one [illegible] of property for which there is a steady demand in this locality.

Chances in S[illegible] street, toward Howard street, may be expected in a week.

In suburban property one of the most interesting [illegible] at Hanover Four Corners, the well known Edward Stetson place, has been sold. This is the most attractive Colonial house to be found anywhere in this State. The property has 125 acres of [illegible] land and has been for some [illegible] the home of Daniel F. Damon, Register of Probate for Plymouth County, who through Edward T. Harrington Company [illegible] has sold to Susanna Wilson for a Summer residence.

The two brick buildings, Nos. 312-314 Shawmut avenue, corner on Union Park street, South End, has been purchased by William Schwartz from S[illegible] Price. The tax is made on a valuation of $87,400, including one-third of that amount on the land measuring 4000 square feet.

Winchester.

The sale is reported of a parcel of land at the corner of Warren and Ripley streets, Winchester, containing 7,229 square feet. Freeland E. Hovey, et al., were the grantors, the purchaser being Clare O. Beuman, who will erect a dwelling house.

Deeds have been recorded [illegible] title to estate No. 45 Ca[illegible] road, [illegible] a dwelling house a[illegible] square feet of land. [illegible] grantor was Fannie S. Foger, the [illegible] William H. Cole. The Edward T. Harrington Company was the broker in the above transactions.

Newport

The sale is reported of [illegible] parcel of land at F[illegible], Newport, having a frontage of [illegible] feet on [illegible] avenue. The grantor [illegible] Benson, the purchaser [illegible] M[illegible]. The sale is also reported of [illegible] lying on the west [illegible] avenue with a combined [illegible] feet, containing 9,750 square feet. Mary Walters was the purchaser [illegible] Arnold being the grantor. The Edward T. Harrington Co. was the broker.

Everett.

Anna A. Gilman has taken title to an estate at the corner of Ewan and Kinsman streets, Everett, comprising a two-apartment house of twelve rooms and 4,000 feet of land, Michael J. Cotter being the grantor.

Marlbourough.

The so-called Guinnette farm, located on the State highway, Marlbrough, comprising [illegible] acres of land with orchard, and six-room bungalow and stable has been sold to Frank Longlan of New Bedford, H. A. Frost being the grantor.

Pembroke.

The sale is reported of an estate on Silver Lake, Pembroke, located on Farnham road and comprising one and one-half acres of land, together with a six room bungalow. The grantor was Nathaniel Morton, trustee, and the purchaser Henry Mathews. The Edward T. Harrington Co. was the broker.

Lancaster.

The sale is reported of 16 acres of land on Fontain Heights road, Lancaster, Grace Maynard being the grantor and Arthur H. [illegible] the purchaser. The same grantor has sold 8 acres on Harvard street, corner of Leominster road, Lancaster, the purchaser being Thomas A. Dandy, et al.

Dorchester.

The Massachusetts Realty Company has negotiated the sale of the estate No. 2[illegible] Wainwright street, Dorchester, consisting of a lot of land containing [illegible]811 square feet, and three [illegible], owned by [illegible] J. P[illegible]. The estate is assessed for $6,700, $1,2[illegible] on the land. The purchaser was [illegible] P. Wardwell.

Deeds have passed, conveying to the Edison Electric Illuminating Company of Boston several parcels of land on Massachusetts avenue, Norfolk avenue and Franklin court in Dorchester, which have been added to the large tract which has heretofore been acquired by the Edison Company, upon which the company is already constructing several buildings for the general service station which is to be located there. All of these negotiations were conducted by Whitcomb & Co. The total area of land now owned by the company in this locality is about 70,000 square feet, and the total frontage on Massachusetts avenue is about 1[illegible] feet and the total frontage on Norfolk avenue is about 870 feet.

Through the office of W. R[illegible] & Son George Dame has sold to H[illegible] the frame house, No. 43 Knoll street, Roslindale. This property has not yet been assessed.

Through the same firm, William S. M[illegible] has sold to William G. K[illegible] the house, No. 65 Ardale street, Roslindale, with a lot containing 5,000 square feet.

Cruff & Byrne report the sale of the property No. 4276 Washington street, Roslindale, consisting of a [illegible] tenements, 4,[illegible]00 feet of land [illegible] $4,100. C. H. [illegible]ffrey transfers to [illegible] Grethewey.

Columbus Avenue.

Jacob Tarplin [illegible] has purchased from [illegible] M[illegible]rs, trustee, the four-story brick and [illegible] house and store located at No. [illegible] Columbus avenue. The property is taxed for $1[illegible],000, $7,600 of which is on the 2454 square feet of land. [illegible] was the broker.

Billerica.

At the [illegible] Billerica lots are being taken up very rapidly. Building operations have already [illegible]. This tract has only been on the market two weeks and fifty-two lots have already been sold and several [illegible] contract. Sales recorded [illegible] were, to John E. Gould of M[illegible], [illegible] Harlow of Dorchester, [illegible] of Everett, Mar[illegible] of Cambridge; J. Marie of [illegible] of Charlestown, [illegible] of Cambridge, M. J. [illegible] Louise Robinson of [illegible] of Cambridge, Nellie [illegible]. These sales were by [illegible].

At [illegible] Manor, Billerica, Mr. [illegible] sales of lots to C. Albert [illegible] E. Shannon of Boston and [illegible] of Cambridge.

At Surfside Park, Hampton Beach, N. H., [illegible] reports lots sold to Rose V. Bernardo of Connecticut, R. I.; L. St. John [illegible], N. H.; E. J. Smith of Haverhill; [illegible] Harrington of Newport; Lillian [illegible] of Medway, and M. C. Lewis of Roslindale.

[illegible] reports the following deeds passed during the week:

Horace S. and William B. Childsey, at East Haven Gardens, New Haven, Ct.; Edward H. Conney, East Haven Gardens, New Haven, Ct.; John Bernier, Lakeside Park, Billerica; Matilda Quincy, East Longmeadow villa sites, Springfield; Steven Lowery, East Braintree; Edward J. But a Half American Baby will Get the Dukedom Anyway!

"Long as ye heir shall pick his bride
From Britain's soil, the line shall bide;
When he weds a woman from o'er the sea,
The house of Roxburghe shall cease to be."

—The Ancient Rhyming Legend of the Roxburghes.

he trange ld tork iscouraging egend of the oble oxburghes (which eems to be oming rue) and ow merican lood will till ear the oronet (ven if it oes ome rue.)

HIS Majesty the Stork will not visit Floors Castle; the Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe have again been disappointed in their hopes for an heir. Nine years ago the Duke of Roxburghe, a cold, slightly austere young nobleman, married Miss May Goelet, only daughter of Mrs. Ogden Goelet and niece of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr. Miss Goelet was a very great heiress. To-day her fortune is little less than twenty-five millions.

The Dowager Duchess of Roxburghe, known as the cleverest matchmaker in Great Britain, was responsible for the match. The Dowager Duchess, herself an English woman, defied fate in engineering this marriage. No heir has been born to the ducal couple, and should the American Duchess remain childless a quaint and curious family tradition will be authenticated.

And this tradition? It dates back two hundred years, and is that when the direct heir falls in love with or marries a woman from over the seas he will have no children; his line will cease! Very much money has been spent to prove this tradition a mere chimera, but the handsome young Duchess fails to get her heart's desire, and she is growing very melancholy

The Roxburghes have always been fighters; they have been ardent lovers, too, but from the founding of the dukedom the "woman from over the seas" has cast a dire influence on them. When the first Duke was created in 1707 the Roxburghes had long been an important family. John, the first Duke, was Secretary of State under George I., and it was he who was responsible for the curse that fell on his descendants.

One day this proud and cruel noble ran down and killed the child of a gypsy woman. This occurred in the forest near Floors Castle. The gypsy cursed the nobleman, and threatened his children and children's children with sorrows and trials. "Your line will be cursed," she said, "your heir will be childless, and your wife's eyes will grow blind from weeping."

At this time the Duke's heir was his grandson, a little lad of five. This boy grew up. "The handsomest Roxburghe of them all," he was called. His grandfather died before the lad came of age. The venerable Duchess lost her sight before her death.

When this third Duke was twenty-one, wealthy, gallant and ready for romance, he set out to make a grand tour of Europe. The day he left his Scottish home a decrepit old gypsy hag stopped him and whined, "Beware of the woman from over the sea! She will bring you no children."

It was the gypsy whose child the Duke's grandfather had killed. The young Duke crossed the Channel and visited many countries. He went to Russia finally, and on his way back stopped at Strelitz. The little court here was ruled by the Dowager Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz. She had two daughters, one a great beauty, the Princess Christine; the other a very pronounced ugly duckling, the Princess Charlotte. The Duke fell in love with the beauty, and was accepted. Then a most strange thing happened. King George of England made a formal demand for the hand of the ugly duckling! It was for reasons of state, of course, and the marriage was arranged. And the Duke's romance was knocked into a cocked hat. He could not marry his king's sister-in-law!

The Duke never married. And the Princess Christine never married. At the Duke's death, having no son, the title went to a distant kinsman, William Ker. The woman from over the sea had fulfilled her destiny!

The fourth Duke, oddly enough, went to Russia a month after his accession, fell in love with the beautiful daughter of an innkeeper; he could not marry her and died a year later, childless. The title practically became extinct. At the end of fifty years it was revived, and the present Duke is of this revived line.

And with his marriage the fell tradition of the woman from over the seas is revived. His American bride, with her many millions, brings him no children. There is, however, a very strange state of affairs in the Roxburghe family. The Duke's heir, Lord Alastair Innes Ker, married an American girl, Annie Breese, a cousin of James Lawrence Breese. They have two lovely boys, the eldest of whom will eventually succeed to the title.

And so, unless fate intervenes, the title will, after all, go to the son of a woman from over the seas! Truth is stranger than fiction.

And stranger still is the romance of the beautiful Countess of Ancaster. Before the Duke of Roxburghe married Miss Goelet he was very devoted to Miss Eloise Breese, an older sister of the girl who married Innes Ker. The Duke of Roxburghe was on the verge of marrying this American girl when he met Miss Goelet. And Miss Breese married the Earl of Ancaster and has three beautiful children.

Why a Good LAUGH Is Really HEALTHFUL

And Why FEAR, Sorrow, Worry, Anger and Bad News INJURES US

"LAUGH and grow fat," say [illegible] literally. Laughter may make certain people [illegible] least increase their weight considerably, but the way the old saying should be changed to make it really within [illegible] would be "Laugh and increase your health," for laughter is healthful.

It may be that this saying was first used back in the days when the general idea was that fat was a sign of good health, while lean persons were regarded as unhealthy.

Of course [illegible] fat is not to be healthy necessarily, any [illegible] to be thin is to be unhealthy. Too much fat is even worse than too little [illegible] will cause [illegible] danger point.

Worry [illegible] effects of worry, and, while not [illegible] make one of normal weight, all other conditions being normal.

[illegible] physical effect [illegible] condition of [illegible] that [illegible] antly affect [illegible]. Recent [illegible] have brought to light the fact that Nature is fairness itself. That is, if you give Nature a square deal he will reciprocate. You may nurse sorrows, suspicions, fears and such emotion and [illegible] in an optimistic mood [illegible] and laugh, and Nature promptly rewards you by building you up, physically.

Only a short while ago Sir Lauder Brunton, Bart., [illegible] of England's noted physicians, with a long string of thoroughly earned degrees and titles, and consulting physician at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, made a most interesting address at the annual meeting of the Ipswich Medical Society on "Strain," and during this he dwelt at great length upon the effect of emotions upon the body and the healthfulness of laughter.

Sir Lauder had the best authority for this, as it was the great Harvey who said:

"For every affection of mind which is attended with either pain or pleasure, hope or fear, is the cause of an agitation whose influence extends to the heart. And what, indeed, is more deserving of attention than the fact that in almost every affection, appetite, hope or fear, our body suffers, the [illegible] changes, and the blood appears to course hither and thither. In anger the eyes are fiery and the pupils contracted; in modesty the cheeks are suffused with blushes. In fear and under a sense of infamy and of shame, the face is pale, but the ears burn as for the evil they heard or were to hear."

Laughter is but one of the many healthful emotions. That is, an emotion whose effect upon the body is helpful instead of harmful. A sudden [illegible] shock from bad news acts upon the body in a harmful manner, but something amusing, entertaining, [illegible], pleasing, all have beneficial effects upon the human system. To laugh is probably far more healthful than to smile, for it is a larger and more vigorous [illegible] emotions. But in addition to laughter, the smile is healthful; good news is healthful; pleasurable anticipation is healthful, and all those emotions [illegible] are the direct opposite to sorrow, pain, gloom and other distressing feelings and conditions are decidedly healthful. But of all these the laugh is best of all.

Sir Lauder explained that the effects of emotions on the body have been well studied by Darwin, who showed that both in man and the lower animals sudden fear brings a tightening of the muscles so quickly as to be involuntary. When one is riding a quiet horse and he shies or bolts suddenly, instantly the rider's leg, back and arm muscles tighten almost like steel bands to enable him to keep his seat.

For a great many years we have been saying things and reading hackneyed expressions in novels that have meant very little to us as far as the actual truth in them is concerned. For instance, we say: "He laughed heartily," and it conveys to us only the idea that the man laughed with vigor and force, as though he thoroughly enjoyed whatever caused his laughter. But there is still more truth in the saying. "Heartily," means, in this instance, "healthfully."

"He felt as though walking on air," is frequently used, especially in stories when one of the characters has been given a promotion or has won his lady love or some other great happiness has fallen to his lot. We seldom think of the character as feeling as though he were actually treading on air, and yet the saying should be taken literally, for several kinds of great happiness give one just exactly that feeling. One feels, for a little while, as though there were no sidewalk beneath his feet. He is so happily occupied with his joy that he does not give thought to where he steps, whether it be turf or cobblestones, smooth pavement or pebbly paths.

"His heart beat high," is another saying that is almost to be taken literally. Great joy makes one's [illegible] beat rapidly and feel as though it had moved [illegible] and close under the collarbone.

Opposite emotions are also noticeable for their action upon the body. "His heart was heavy as lead," is a much-used saying. Bitter disappointment or great sorrow gives one the feeling that his heart has sagged away down to his bottom ribs.

Bad news or other great sorrows will literally destroy one's appetite. Sometimes it will even make one faint, to actual nausea. Another much-used phrase is "Bowels of compassion." Authorities declare now that compassion really does effect many by giving them a peculiar feeling of weakness and faintness at the pit of the stomach, which is caused by sudden and great pity for any one.

"If," declares Sir Lauder, "the emotional excitement be not too great and not too often repeated, and if all the organs affected by it are healthy, it will do no harm, and is likely, indeed, to be beneficial, just like intellectual work or muscular exercise. One of the most striking examples of lack of proper nourishment due to emotion is the condition that sometimes comes on in girls who have been bitterly disappointed [illegible] love."

There are cases where such girls have died [illegible] this, notwithstanding so many have said [illegible] dies of a "broken heart." Of course, "broken heart" is not to be taken literally, but when taken to mean "disappointment in love," it is true that it has [illegible] known to prove fatal. Fear is another emotion that can result in death. There is a case known by Sir Lauder of a girl who saw her brother killed by accident who never recovered from the shock, dying a few months later.

Great anxiety will cause a sudden disorder of the stomach; a sudden shock will cause lapse of memory and will also cause one suffering from lapse of memory to suddenly recover. Sir Lauder once experimented upon himself in the matter of the effect of emotions upon the body. He was bitterly disappointed at not being able to keep an appointment. Knowing his normal blood pressure, he found that the emotion of annoyance and disappointment had caused it to increase one-third.

And while sorrows and such things affect the body adversely, the emotions of joy affect the body in a manner that actually brings relief. A convalescent will recover twice as speedily if he sees friends, is cheered by visits, good entertaining, reading and pleasant surroundings. A person may be suffering from a most depressing mood and meet an acquaintance who promptly slaps him on the back, tells him a dozen jolly anecdotes, laughs infectiously, gets [illegible] person to laughing, and—presto!—his depressing [illegible] has fled. Laughter did it, and that is one of the many reasons why laughter is so helpful.

The man who laughs and defies worry builds up his health, while the man who scowls and worries habitually will never be healthy.

Why We Can Scarcely TASTE Unless We Can SMELL

COMPARATIVELY little of the food we eat has enough sharpness to make us enjoy it [illegible] less by the sense of taste—indeed by far the greater amount of the food we eat has no "taste" at all, although we seem to taste it. What we do, in most cases, is to smell the food both before it is in the mouth and after, and by a sort of cross-action the sense of taste is excited by the sense of smell.

Nearly every one is familiar with the curiously flat stale taste that most dishes seem to have when the diner is afflicted with a cold in the head. That is the true taste. The cold has merely clogged up the passages which lead to the membranes that are excited by the sense of smell, so that you do not smell the dish. The palate and other parts of the mouth and throat affected by the sense of taste have to do their work unaided by the sense of smell, and so much less [illegible] that in many cases scarcely any taste can be distinguished.

It has been suggested that even so pungent a food as the onion cannot always be distinguished [illegible] alone. A [illegible] of onions chopped fine [illegible] strong onions), and a spoonful of apple [illegible] may be presented to a person of [illegible] sense of taste. If the nose [illegible] to tell them apart, and [illegible] be possible to do [illegible] curious after [illegible] which is nothing more or less than the sense of smell operating by means of the interior passages back of the nose.

There are, of course, some notable exceptions. Thus the quince smells of turpentine but does not convey that taste; the custard fruit is unbearable to the sense of smell yet delicious to the taste. Many people like the taste of gin who cannot endure the smell, while it is doubtful if even the most confirmed absinthe drinker ever grows to like the paregoric odor of his favorite tipple. On the other hand highly scented candies are cloying and nauseous [illegible] the taste and over-spicing makes many dishes unpalatable. Much of the medicine that is taken with so much objection is almost tasteless, though offensive to the sense of smell. The trick is well known to makers of fancy confections in Paris, to serve them in or on the paper holders which have been delicately perfumed, because the sense of smell is then pleased before eating, but the sense of taste is not cloyed afterward. A good cook should be as careful that things smell good as that they taste good.

In fact, many noted chefs owe a great share of their success to their ability to prepare special dishes that give what is termed an "appetizing aroma." The expression, "It smells good enough to eat," explains this.

The Danger of PORK

NO other food taxes the digestive apparatus so severely as pork. It requires at least five hours to digest even when well cooked and eaten with some acid accompaniment, like apple sauce, which greatly aids in the process of digestion.

Pork is also far less nourishing than other meats. It has only half the salts of beef and only half as much protein (muscle-building food) as mutton.

Pigs fed on buttermilk make the best pork. This kind of diet gives the meat a rich flavor and adds to its nourishing qualities the valuable salts of milk.

As pork spoils more quickly than other meats great care should be taken in buying it. In good pork the fat is very white and solid and feels cool to the touch. If it is flabby, stringy and yellowish in color it usually unfit to eat.

The lean should be of a healthy pink color and should look neither too wet nor too dry. When pressed with the finger it should spring back into place with the elasticity that is characteristic of all good meat.

In buying a loin of pork beware of [illegible] kernels which are sometimes found in the fat, especially around the kidneys. These are signs of disease and render the meat unfit for use.

The rind is a good test of age in pork. In a young pig, whose meat is tender, the rind will be found thin, smooth, moderately soft and slightly yielding to pressure.

Improving the PENNY

THE director of the Mint is dissatisfied with the make-up of the one-cent piece. He recommends that it be altered.

The reason why the cent is unsatisfactory is that it is almost wholly copper—in exact figures, 95 per cent. copper and 5 per cent. tin and zinc. Copper rapidly oxidizes and the penny soon becomes dull and dirty.

The old copper cent was, in point of design, the handsomest coin we had. The penny with the Lincoln head is said to be the ugliest and least artistic. The director of the Mint offers no criticism on this point, but complains that the coin quickly becomes unfit for circulation.

This is especially true when [illegible] comes into contact with the salt air. Hence it follows that copper cents in circulation near the sea-coast do not last as long as those which pass from hand to hand in the interior of the country. Pennies that lie for a while in slot machines undergo rapid disintegration, and when offered for redemption have to be melted for recoinage.

Pennies when first coined are very beautiful, their yellow lustre surpassing that of gold, for there is no metal quite so attractive to the eye as new copper. [illegible] they tarnish almost immediately, inasmuch as they pass from hand to hand more [illegible] any other coins, [illegible] ought to be made of [illegible] very [illegible] material obviously.

Up to 1857 our cents contained [illegible] per cent. of nickel. It made them much harder and more serviceable. The director of the Mint suggests that it would be a good idea to go back to the old recipe for making them. Some foreign countries are already making small coins of pure nickel which are both handsome and durable.

Why Your HAIR Is Turning GRAY

ONE of the first signs of old age is the turning gray of the hair, although in a few cases gray or even white hair is found in [illegible] this true evidence of decay. It is of interest to see what is the process whereby hair becomes white or gray. It is due to the fact that the color of the hair (which exists in the cells of the outer two layers of the hair) is eaten by cells from the innermost layer, which have been kept in check by the vitality of the outer layer cells, but which have their chance as soon as these begin to lose their vigor.

What is perhaps even more alarming is that these cells which have devoured the color of the hair, become full of activity and begin to move around, leaving the hair as soon as the color is devoured and passing on into the scalp, where they continue their work of attacking the vital cells. These macrophags—as the devouring cells are called—are found in all parts of the body as soon as old age begins to set in, and are especially active in the walls of the arteries setting up the condition known as arterio-sclerosis, from which many people die, and from which no person is free.

The brittleness of the bones of old persons is due to the same cause, that these macrophags have devoured the live cells and taken their places, so that there is less elasticity in the bone. It is this, too, which prevents broken bones from healing in the aged. The same condition stops the healing of wounds as we become older, so that a cut in the hand which will be entirely healed in three days in a child will take two weeks in an adult, and a couple of months in a very old man or woman.

It is one of the curious facts of old age, that the very same agencies which bring about the destruction of the body after seventy or eighty years have passed, are exactly those which defend the body against illness during youth. The machrophags are closely allied to and by some are believed to be the same as the phagocytes, which are defending cells of the body in its fight against disease. If we escape death by accident or disease, sooner or later the gallant defenders of the body will turn upon it and destroy it. Truly a man's foes are those of his own household.

These macrophags do not work at all speedily, however, and one should not take fright at the appearance of the first few gray hairs. A great many young people have gray hairs who have not reached their vigor, to say nothing of having begun to lose it. Again, an injury to the scalp will frequently cause gray hair. An accident where the scalp has been torn will result in white hair growing out when [illegible] wound is healed. Worry is also responsible for premature gray hair, but this is bad, inasmuch as the work has so undermined the system and impoverished the blood as to give the actively destroying cells opportunity to begin on the hair.

And, again, there are men and women too, for that matter, who, at the age of thirty or thirty-five, have remarkably gray hair. Their complexion is youthful and they live for another thirty years in health and vigor, all of which proves the macrophags not as dangerous as they are painted.

The FUEL Values of Various FISH

"FISH is not heating" has been the declaration of housewives, cooks and old fashioned nurses and doctors for many years. But this is by no means exactly true, inasmuch as there are varieties of fish that are as heating as beef.

It is true there are some fish that contain water in place of [illegible] and therefore lack the calories of [illegible] of the fish that [illegible] and are, therefore, [illegible] the California salmon leads the [illegible] Maine salmon a close second, [illegible] having a value of [illegible] calories per pound. The same cuts of Maine [illegible] 658 calories per pound [illegible] order of values is Spanish [illegible] for the table, 585 calories. [illegible] value of all the ordinary [illegible] flounder with 122 calories to the pound, the general average of fresh fish of all kinds, as sold, being about 300 calories. The great difference in value between salmon and flounder, for instance, is explained by the fact that the former contains a large proportion of fat, and fat has a very high fuel value, being in fact the most concentrated form of body [illegible] there is.

People inclined to be corpulent are very often so because they have for a long period been storing up fat that was not needed for the uses of the body, and by cutting off the supply of unrequired fat in the food they will gradually, to some extent, draw on the store of fat in the body for the fuel it needs [illegible]

Therefore, the fatty fish, such as salmon, shad, eels and mackerel, should be avoided and the lean fish, like cod, flounder, [illegible] weakfish, etc., be eaten instead.

An "ARREST ME, I'M OVERSPEEDING," Device

RECKLESS and [illegible] automobile speeding will become an obsolete pastime, a "dead game sport," if an invention recently considered by an Aldermanic committee of the Chicago City Council is forcibly put into use as an appurtenance to every motor car.

Not only will joy riders be eliminated in the city streets, but the motorcycle policeman may lose his job, or else be set [illegible] to a status of shoe leather. He will not be needed.

The new device, an outcome of a speed lust contagion which has spread tragedy and disaster throughout Chicago, is called by its inventor the "automatic policeman." When one of these little machines is installed on a motor car, the owner or driver runs imminent risk of arresting himself whenever he goes forth to spin. Naturally this cute little novelty is not making friends among a certain set of automobilists. When the invention was set to work before the Chicago City Council Committee on Vehicle Regulation, it aroused gasps of horrified astonishment among representatives of automobile organizations who were present.

The "automatic policeman," when installed upon the hood of the car, appears to be merely a little tin box, surmounted by a weather vane. On top of the box is an arch of metal, which twirls constantly when the automobile is in motion. It revolves not because of the pressure of the wind, but as a result of the inward workings of the "automatic policeman." When this arch ceases twirling the driver of the car as well as the policeman on the corner know that the speed controller is out of order, and therefore, if it is not repaired at once, the owner is guilty of an infraction of a city ordinance. That is in case the "automatic policeman" is ever adopted by the municipality.

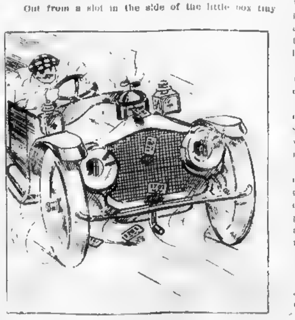
When a motorist exceeds the legal rate of speed, which is say fifteen miles an hour, a bell inside the little metal box starts ringing. It jangles loudly enough for the deaf to hear. If the automobile is not slowed down to a pace within the legal limits immediately, something else happens which makes the driver exceedingly sorry that he did not obey the insistent warnings of the bell at once.

Out from a slot in the side of the little box tiny brass disks begin to shoot into the roadway. Each of these missiles bears on its face the license number of the machine. Every few feet one of these "calling cards" drops to the pavement, where it may be picked up by any small boy, who would feel quite honored when turning it over to a policeman. After the disks have been strewn in the street, the motorist might as well slink homewards and await the summons to the police court. Escape would be practically impossible after a number of witnesses had been secured to testify as to the tinkling of the bell, and a policeman had gathered a pocketfull of telltale disks.

Should the "automatic policeman" be adopted in any city, the work of the anti-speed squad would become a leisurely game of "hare and hounds." Stooping in the roadway would be the most violent exercise a policeman on this detail would have to take. A small child, attended by its nurse, might do detective work which would result in the tracking down of a motorist wanted for manslaughter.

The inventor of the "automatic policeman" is Rudolph Berliner, musical director of the Colonial Theatre, Chicago. Mr. Berliner, who began his musical career as a regimental bandmaster during the Philippine insurrections, narrowly escaped death several months ago under the wheels of a speeding automobile. While impressions of the accident were still fresh in his memory, he read in a newspaper about the Brooklyn detective who traced down a murderous "joy rider" after weeks of patient search by means of a tiny mechanical part, which had been dropped in the road by the fleeing speeder.

This suggested the idea of the shooting slugs, and with the aid of an engineer, Mr. Berliner went to work on the now completed device which worked [illegible] action before the Aldermen of Chicago.



"The little weather-vane whirls first, then the bell rings [illegible] if the chauffeur [illegible] heed that, out pop the auto numbers, which mean [illegible] an arrest."

What the SHERIFF May NOT TAKE

TO protect the honest debtor from oppression at the hands of remorseless creditors, it has been the policy of the law to designate certain articles deemed necessary for human sustenance as being "exempt from execution," that is to say, the Sheriff may not seize them to satisfy a debt.

New York's law on the subject was passed in 1828 as part of the Revised Statutes and has been re-enacted from time to time with but slight change, although living conditions have, of course, altered considerably in the past ninety years.

As a result of this situation, the New York flat-dweller will find, if he looks up the law providing for his "exemptions from execution," that however much the high cost of living may enslave him, the Sheriff will never be able to take from him any of the following articles which may be discovered in his flat:

"All spinning wheels, weaving looms and stoves put up or kept for use in a dwelling house and one sewing machine with its appurtenances.

"Ten sheep with their fleeces, and the yarn or cloth manufactured therefrom; one cow, two swine, the necessary food for those animals, all necessary meat, fish, flour, groceries and vegetables, actually provided for family use, and necessary fuel, oil and candles, for the use of the family for sixty days.

"All wearing apparel, beds, bedsteads and bedding, necessary for the judgment debtor and the family; all necessary cooking utensils; one table, six chairs, six knives, six forks, six spoons, six plates, six tea cups, six saucers, one sugar dish, one milk pot, one tea pot, one crane and its appendages, [illegible] pair of andirons, one coal scuttle, one [illegible] pair of tongs, one lamp and one candlestick."

WHO IS AMERICA'S MOST BEAUTIFUL WOMAN?

Are You She? Here's a Chance to Earn $250 a Week on the Stage-Or Win a Gold Medal

New York, July 6, 1912.

TO THE EDITOR:

We wish to secure for appearance at the Winter Garden, New York, during the coming season the most beautiful woman in America. To that woman we offer an engagement of at least four weeks at a minimum salary of $250 per week, with the option of renewing the contract for a longer period. In addition, we will supply her with suitable costumes and will pay her travelling expenses to New York if she should prove to live outside of New York

To find the type of woman we have in mind we know of no better medium than your newspaper, and we hereby authorize you to make the above offer in our name to the woman who shall be selected by a competent board of judges as the winner of a National Beauty Contest to be conducted in your magazine pages.

The only conditions we impose are (1) that the young woman selected shall be at least eighteen years of age; (2) that if under twenty-one years of age she shall have the written consent of her parents or guardians to her adoption of a stage career; and (3) that she shall not have had previous experience on the professional stage.

We will also supply five handsome gold medals, valued at one hundred dollars ($100) each, to be awarded to five other women whose beauty shall be declared by your judges to rank next to that of the winner of the grand prize. Yours very truly,

THE WINTER GARDEN COMPANY.
Per J. J. Shubert

ON THIS PAGE are printed photographs of three remarkably beautiful women—Mlle. Gaby Deslys, Miss Lillian Russell and Mlle. Greuze—each of [illegible] an entirely different type of charm, has won great success on the stage.

For appearance at the Winter Garden in New York during the coming season the Messrs. Shubert, chief owners of the Garden, are desirous of bringing to America a woman as beautiful as any of these or, if possible, more beautiful.

To that woman they offer, as explained in the letter from the Winter Garden Company, reproduced above, an engagement of at least four weeks at the Winter Garden at a guaranteed salary of two hundred and fifty dollars ($250) a week. They will further [illegible] at their own expense suitable costumes for her and will pay [illegible] the trip from her home to New York, where she will be launched on her stage career under the most auspicious possible circumstances.

To the five women whose beauty is adjudged next to that of the winner of this surpassing grand prize will be awarded five gold medals, valued at one hundred dollars ($100) each.

In order to give it the widest possible publicity the search for the most beautiful American woman has been intrusted to this newspaper, which guarantees the good faith of the Winter Garden Company's offer and will see that the awards are made in the fairest possible manner by a board of judges composed of three eminent American artists. The names of these judges will be announced later.

If you think you have the beauty and the requisite [illegible] a stage career and if you [illegible] all the other requirements stated in the Winter Garden Company's letter, write your full name and address and your age on the back of your best and most recent photograph and mail it at once to

BEAUTY CONTEST EDITOR,
POST OFFICE BOX 208,
NEW YORK CITY

Photographs submitted in this contest positively cannot be returned. They become the property of this newspaper, which reserves all rights to their publication [illegible].

Further details of this nation-wide search for the most beautiful woman will be published in this newspaper every Sunday. The awards will be announced early in September.

DOES WRITING POETRY INDUCE INSANITY AND DISEASE?

Poet Viereck Explains How Wooing the Muse May Bring the Queen of Sheba to Dinner, Cause the Gold Fish to Stare, and Change Dogs into Lobsters

"De Nerval . . . always said the the Queen of Sheba was waiting just around the corner for him."

"De Maupassant often saw his double."

DOES writing poetry cause insanity? Does wooing the muse drive men insane, produce hallucinations, make idiots of poets and produce disease?

Is it the most dangerous occupation in the world?

George Sylvester Viereck, that [illegible] young poet of whom you may possibly have heard, says so. He declares that writing poetry is more dangerous than working in a coal mine or a dynamite factory, that it drives men to drink, to poverty, that it destroys the moral [illegible], makes snobs, idiots and megalomaniacs of many who wield the pen, and that it induces diseases of [illegible] is more to be feared than [illegible].

Of course Mr. Viereck ought to know. When Mr. Viereck's first book of poems, "Nineveh," was published several years ago [illegible] and [illegible] have been [illegible] and taxicab robberies that swept over New York.

However, Mr. Viereck is never more going to write a poem again. Here he tells why:

The Perils of Poetry

By George Sylvester Viereck

I SHALL give up poetry for many reasons. Poetry leads to insanity, for one thing; poetry induces diseases, for another. I am certain that the scientist is right, who says that most literary geniuses develop toxins in their blood. The writing of poetry is unhealthy; my health has been better since I decided to give it up. Moreover, it befogs the brain. Most of the men poets I know are idiots. I am one of the few exceptions of my acquaintance who are not.

Of course poets are supposed to worship beauty. Most as a matter of fact, worship only the papier mache imitation of beauty. I once worshipped the reality, but no longer.

My "Candle and the Flame" will, in all likelihood, be my last book of verse. I no longer worship Beauty. Art for art's sake seems a jest, literature only a sickly mirage of life. My temperament is more dynamic than aesthetic. Activity, as such, allures me. Brooklyn Bridge seems to me a far more marvellous accomplishment than the most precious of sonnets. If I were not Viereck, I would gladly be [illegible]. I sometimes [illegible] I would rather [illegible] the Metropolitan [illegible] than written my [illegible] "Queen Lilith." The spirit of America has eaten into my heart. Wall Street is more interesting to me than Parnassus. The protagonists of great industrial combinations impress me more than the Knights of King Arthur's Table or the vassals of Beowulf. Morgan himself, so I am told, was a poet before finance enthralled him.

If one is to continue writing poetry for many years there are quite terrible dangers he must guard against. Nearly all poets, as a matter of fact, become monomaniacs. They get a fixed idea that they must put everything into rhyme. They think in rhymes, they almost talk in rhymes. It doesn't matter whether they are thinking of the menu of a dinner, the description of scenery, a set of clothes or a highball, they think of it in terms of verse. If they think of love, the first thing that occurs is what word can rhyme to love. Their brains [illegible].

Now in the middle ages, when there were great painters and poets, they did not specialize. They distributed their interests. Some took up carpentering, some were engineers, most engaged in practical occupations; thus they kept sane. It would be a great thing for their sanity if poets to-day would take up additional pursuits, chemistry, engineering, farming, the brokerage business, clerking, anything practical. Richard Le Gallienne recently took up farming. This is an indication of his sanity. As a matter of fact, I know of no man poet who is not in most things a fool. I can make no other exception except when I see myself in a mirror.

Besides, being solely interested in themselves [illegible] in arguing that the universe circles about them, most poets are absolutely illiterate. They are more [illegible] and ignorant than street urchins. Ask a poet about the Titanic disaster, the political situation or any event of news interest and he will look blankly at you. The only interest of most poets is in their own mawkish sentiments and their verses. Now life is the great mistress of human beings; art is only the mirror. To love the image in the mirror is unhealthy. Few poets know anything about life.

"Byron had convulsions whenever he heard Kean recite."

It is horrible to think of a person who can only write; does nothing but write, [illegible] draws from his brain colorless [illegible] images that do not exist, who feeds [illegible] himself, [illegible] and sees the world [illegible] within himself. It is tragic. Why few poets [illegible] an [illegible] in seclusion [illegible]. Is it any wonder they go insane? Go raving [illegible]?

Writing poetry is worse than alcohol. A man who gets drunk on alcohol may [illegible] benefit, as [illegible] a food value. But poetry has no food value. And the man who intoxicates himself writing poetry all the time [illegible] brain starved. I have seen the [illegible] of poets actually [illegible].

The writing of poetry [illegible] drives many poets to drink. It drove many to the gutter. [illegible] very obsession of poetry drove [illegible] to take refuge in wine, that it drove him to wander out, often half mad, and caused him to suffer incredibly. It might have been a wonderful thing for Poe had he, like Le Gallienne, taken to farming or like Ella Wheeler Wilcox, interested himself in [illegible] and sane newspaper editorials. Such work would have compelled him to view sanely his life, to realize the responsibilities of [illegible] all to [illegible] people tell anecdotes of his borrowing money and failing to return it. That is very pitiful and [illegible] bad taste. Poe's worst injuries were to himself; he suffered poverty consequently.

Verlaine was an example of a man whom poetry drove to the gutter. He was so obsessed with poetry that he became a tramp; he lost all interest in his personal appearance; his poems are wonderful, but people who met him said that at times it was painful to look at him. Certainly he was not sane. It might have been well had he given up poetry for awhile.

De Maupassant, who wrote fiction besides poetry, became insane. He thought so intensely of the terrible invisible horror in his "Horla" that he began to imagine the thing existed and actually pursued him. I can well imagine that if I let myself go and continued to write, and thought of nothing but my poetic imageries, that in all reality I should begin to develop hallucinations that the spirits of Lilith, Ashtoreth, Nero, Catullus, Tiberius, the Queen of Sheba and Hadrian were haunting me. I wrote long enough about [illegible] and brooded on the [illegible] intenseness that [illegible] subjects. I have [illegible] would become an obsession [illegible] develop the hallucination [illegible] Sphinx confided her secret [illegible].

De Maupassant [illegible] that he often saw [illegible]. Were I to go so far and [illegible] my double I fear I might [illegible] go mad from jealousy.

I could name many poets who took to drink or went insane. There was Gerard de Nerval, who was first obsessed with mysticism, [illegible] drank horribly and when he went to the gardens of the Tuileries imagined he saw the gold fish lifting their heads from the water and inviting him to follow them into the fountains.

Gerard de Nerval became haunted by the imaginary beings he created. He always said the Queen of Sheba was waiting just around the corner for him. Imagine my condition [illegible] I to go so far as to become convinced that the "beast of the Apocalypse," of which I've written, was waiting about every corner for me! As it is, I used to be afraid of the dark since I decided to give up poetry the dark no longer holds terrors for me. My fear was unquestionably due to an overexcited [illegible].

Nerval also developed a curious mania. He dragged a lobster through the streets of Paris [illegible] with his physician, a solicitous [illegible] objected. Nerval naively expressed his astonishment. He saw no reason why any one should object to his airing his pet; why, he said innocently, lobsters were more inoffensive than dogs; they never even barked. Recently a young man appeared in the Waldorf dining room with a cat on the head of which was a crown of brilliants. I am sure he was a poet; no one but a poet would do anything so extraordinary as take an angora to the Waldorf for lunch. Recently Richard Le Gallienne wrote me a letter telling me of a wonderful water bug he had caught and of which he made a pet. His enthusiasm over the water bug amazed me. I thought he was joking. Other letters followed. He wrote me about his daily observations of the bug, how he kept it in a glass and gave it fresh water daily. He was becoming very fond of it, he said. Then I learned that during this episode he was [illegible] in writing a poem—fortunately the water bug died; otherwise he might have developed a fascination for the beetle. He expressed heart-broken grief when it died.

"He became very fond of that water bug."

Poetry has driven many men poets to suicide. Nerval hanged himself. I have no intention of bringing on such a fate myself, although I have no doubts many of our younger poets would rejoice at such an act.

Chatterton killed himself. Kleist, a widely known German poet, did also. Many thought of it, even if they didn't carry out their intention—among them the poet Cowper. Perhaps it might have been well if he had done so; it would have saved the writing of much inferior [illegible].

Baudelaire might as well have killed himself. He died from general paresis [illegible] poetry, but became [illegible] that he took to [illegible]. He dyed his hair green. I know of a few poets to-day who dye their hair but not green. One day Baudelaire tried to strangle his father-in-law. This fact, despite the statement that he died of softening of the brain, leads me to suspect that he may have had lucid moments.

Poetry drives many poets to drugs. There was de Musset, who drugged himself with a frightful mixture of beer and absinthe; he then imagined he saw his double and that sounds had colors. He often hypnotized himself with a gilt frame—most of the poets I know do it simply with a mirror.

Poets often develop the mania of persecution. They imagine that the critics are always unfairly treating them. Bernardin de St. Pierre developed this idea so strongly that he imagined the people in the street paused to criticise him.

Other poets have had curious aberrations. Schiller, the German poet, used to compose with his feet on ice. The odor of fermenting apples delighted him.

Byron, it is said, had convulsions when he heard Kean recite. He sometimes imagined he was visited by a ghost.

Poets develop all sorts of habits they cannot control. I know a poetess who worked herself into the habit of writing sonnets. It became an irresistible custom. She was absolutely miserable if she didn't finish a sonnet a day. I've known her to do kitchen recipes in sonnets. [illegible] always in sitting [illegible] and [illegible] close to [illegible] streets. Once I asked him [illegible] afraid of open spaces,' he replied.

There is a young poet in New York who writes beautiful poems about mad[illegible]. He declares it the most wonderful thing in the world. That rather indicates, however, that he is perfectly sane.

Considering the dangers of writing poetry, I think it would be safer for a person to go through typhoid than to succumb to the poetic afflatus. Few poets survive it. So, for the time being at least, I shall write no more.

With even the greatest of writers the longer they write the more incomprehensible they become. There is Thomas Hardy, one of the biggest men in modern literature. No one can understand his last work, "The Dynasts." It is a literary mystery. With poets, however, in the course of years they become so mysterious, so complex, that no one can understand their work. Why, I found it actually necessary to write a commentary in my last book explaining my poems. After I write verses I often forget what they mean. I must keep [illegible]. Why, if I keep on writing [illegible] I was thirty a book of [illegible] would consist of one sonnet [illegible] a commentary explaining [illegible].

Recently I wrote a poem [illegible] "Crucified." I forgot to make a note explaining its meaning. And now, when I read it I am mystified. I can no longer understand my own poem. So this is the last I shall write.

"Wrote her kitchen recipes in sonnet form."

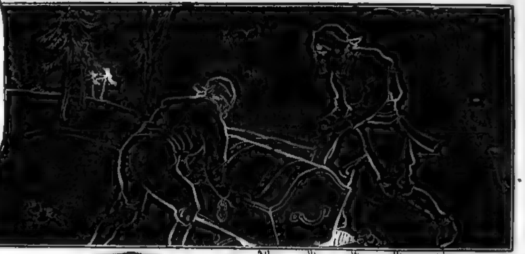
A Woman's Duel for Pirate Treasure

ss Genevive Davies, Who Heads One Expedition for the Fabled Treasure on Cocos Island.



The Adventurous and Unique Quest of Two Rival Expeditions, Each Headed by Determined Ladies, for the Famous $30,000,000 of Hidden Gold and Jewels On Torrid Cocos Island

BLOOD may again be shed over the buried treasure of Cocos Island.

To recover the thirty million dollars worth of gold buried there [illegible] hundred years ago b[illegible] thousands of men have [illegible] paid the penalty with their [illegible]. Now two more expeditions are being fitted out to pursue the [illegible] quest, and both of them [illegible] headed by women!

[illegible] search for the Cocos treasure [illegible] hazardous enough in itself, as so [illegible] have found out to their cost, [illegible] additional element of danger is involved in this latest double quest because of the intense rivalry of the two women.

"If thees Ingleesh woman get in [illegible] be too much of [illegible] declares Mlle [illegible] of Marseilles [illegible] organizer of one of the [illegible] ditions.

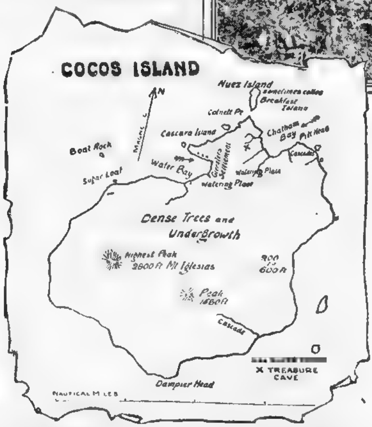
"I started first. I spent a lot of time and money and trouble in this thing, and I certainly shall not allow this Frenchwoman to come between me and the fruits of my labor!" insists Miss Genevive Davies, the beautiful English girl who heads the rival expedition, and there is something about her manner which bodes ill for her fair rival.

Both women are plentifully supplied with cash and each claims to have the only authentic map in existence which definitely points out the location of the sunken treasure. If both parties should arrive at the island together, which is not at all improbable, it will be quite beyond the power of the women, even if so disposed, to hold their followers in check, and a battle to the death for the thirty millions of buried loot is almost inevitable.

Cocos Island lies in latitude 5 degrees 33 minutes N., 86 degrees 59 minutes W. It is a deserted, rocky island about three hundred miles from the coast of Costa Rica.

The treasure which lies buried there was derived from two sources. In 1820, when Peru was being torn asunder by a revolution, the trembling citizens, realizing how feeble was the protection afforded by their banks and the altars of their churches, intrusted it to the captain of an English vessel. This man weighed anchor and sailed for Cocos Island, where he buried the treasure, amounting to twelve million dollars.

In the Pirates' Graveyard on Cocos Island.



Map Showing the Location of the Cocos Island Treasure.

The balance of the treasure was buried on the island by no less a character than the notorious pirate Benito Bonito, who with a loyal crew of cutthroats did an immense amount of damage in the Western Atlantic from New York to Rio Janeiro in 1816-1817.

Bonito then doubled Cape Horn and ravaged the Pacific shore of America as far as Mexico, sacking the churches and other repositories of plate, jewels and specie until his loot amounted to nearly twenty million dollars in value.

In searching for a spot to bury this treasure, he came upon Cocos Island. There he buried his share of it in a cave, while his officers and crew chose other hiding places. The following year the pirate and his crew were captured by a British corvette, and slain.

From that time to this as many as a dozen notable expeditions have been organized to recover this pirate loot, but for one reason or another every one failed.

The latest expeditions to be organized to recover the sunken treasure are perhaps more ambitious than any ever before undertaken.

Miss Davies has chartered a large steamer, which is now completing its outfit at Plymouth. The only other woman on board the vessel will be her friend, Mrs. Barry Till. Besides the crew, there will be a number of mining experts, geologists and other scientific men.

In preparing for this adventure, Miss Davies has constantly kept in mind the possibility of hostilities with her French rival. For this reason she has had her vessel practically converted into a protected cruiser. Her hull and decks have been sheathed with steel a quarter of an inch thick and she has had mounted four six pounders. In addition to this a large supply of small arms and ammunition has been provided, and every member of the crew has been picked with due regard to his fighting calibre.

"I am going after this treasure and intend to get it at any cost," declared Miss Davies. "If this Frenchwoman happens to get to the island while I am there, there may be trouble, and I am prepared for it.

"I have what I believe is an authentic map of the island with certain marks indicating the hiding-place of the treasure. This Frenchwoman's idea, I suppose, is to take advantage of the information I have, and beat me out in quest for the treasure. I shall consider myself justified in resisting by force any attempt of that kind."

Mlle. Durand, on the other hand, declares that she has information of her own and is in no wise dependent upon Miss Davies' expedition.

"Indeed," she declared, "I am straining every nerve now to get to the island before this English woman, and if my plans turn out right I will be on my way back with the treasure safely stowed before this Miss Davies appears upon the scene.

"My vessel is now being equipped at Marseilles. I will be the only woman on board, but my crew consists of friends who are eager to follow me in this great adventure and to share in the spoil we expect to bring home.

"I have full information regarding this pirate treasure. It comes direct from the son of a man who as a lad served under Bonito the pirate. This man, now seventy-five years old, obtained from his father a diagram which clearly marks the cave in which Bonito buried most of his ill-gotten treasure, besides numerous other spots where members of the pirate crew buried their individual shares.

"I am not looking for trouble with this English woman. No, no. But if when I have located the treasure she should arrive at the island and attempt to interfere with my work I will not be answerable for the consequences. She will bring it upon herself. I will not be responsible.

"Altogether there is thirty million dollars' worth of it, I understand. If I succeed in locating only a portion of this vast sum, my investment will prove profitable, but it is the adventure itself which impels me principally. The fact that this English woman is going to try to beat me out makes the quest all the more interesting. We shall see who wins!"

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at Nos. 37 and 39 West 57th street, N. Y.

By LADY DUFF-GORDON ("Lucile")

HERE in my Old Paris Garden and three of what I think my most beautiful recent creations.

The net and lace gown of white over shell pink. The bodice has the upstanding wired collar which is so fashionable at the moment. There are tiny puffed sleeves of lace with long plain net sleeves reaching to the wrist.

The skirt has the apron front with a long white satin sash, and there is a beautiful wreath of white and yellow flowers to finish off the bodice.

With this gown is worn a soft pale pink chiffon baby hat trimmed with ruche of white with pink satin and with a bunch of hand made flowers at the side.

Another elegant gown is the black and white striped chiffon afternoon costume. It is over white satin. The skirt is caught up on hip with handsome ornament of white satin and black velvet.

A round collar of point de Venice goes around neck and down side of the bodice. Strappings of white satin on the black and white look very smart while there is a deep cuff of the white satin on the sleeve.

The [illegible] worn with a beautiful hat of fine black straw standing up very high at one side and with long black ostrich feathers twined around the crown, is of flowered voile.

The skirt is so draped that it looks as if it were wound around the figure and caught up on the hip. The sash is of soft colored flowered satin ribbon. Bodice is very plain, crossed over the front and finished at the neck with soft fine lace collar.

A little later on, when every one has become tired of taffetas—and really, we are getting a little too much already of this particular good thing so that the inevitable result and reaction must soon come—and when whipcords and corded cheviots and even fine gray suitings are getting too warm, there is going to be a great display of linens and piques, especially in white.

But it is practically impossible to get away from taffetas, which has even lent something of its own texture to the new foulards—positively, you will hardly recognize them as now printed on a ground of "taffeta zephyr," but whether you do or not you are likely to love them, for they are decidedly pretty. And then again and actually there is a "hair-cord" taffetas called "Hat[illegible]" which is of smart effect both when in plain and shot colorings.

This being really best suited, however, to the making of tailor suits, while, on the other hand, the panniered gown is obviously provided for in perfection by Pompadour patterned silks, where flowers in delicate Old World chintz colorings are scattered over a black, navy blue or some other dark colored ground.

And the very latest novelty of all is a taffetas "Jaspe" to which Paris has given this name on account of its blending of two or more shade tints into a curious device suggestive of the surface of granite. What next, I wonder, will provide inspiration for some new development and design in the most fashionable fabric of the season!

I must admit to being rather in love with some of these aforementioned and attractive silks, which combine the qualities and textures of both taffetas and foulard for thre is positively a Parisian piquancy in the quaint early Victorian primness of these designs. Some show a small hair-line check with a tiny, brightly colored flower set exactly in the centre of each diminutive square, while another distinct and decorative series is of the chintz order, where the colored pattern shows up well on a ground of the old ivory shade known to fame and fashion as "Palu Brule." Sometimes, too, there will be floral [illegible] Pompadour suggestion [illegible] own by their restriction to [illegible] subdued and old fashioned [illegible]ings, and really in one and all of these silken creations, there is so much charm that I for one would find it distinctly difficult to choose between them. I wonder if you will? And now I want to draw your attention to the new colors which are so varied that there will be no excuse for you if after their careful consideration you do not find one or more to suit you. First, then, in order of fashionable favor comes ecru, though as regards the actually becoming effects, I must say that I would not give it the same prominence of position for it demands a clear whiteness [illegible] of its wearers or at any rate, its successful wearers. There are several different varieties of shades which are admitted under this one heading and which range from the palest old lace effects to the more definite (but still most delicate) mushroom, the mushroom being, indeed, one of the most modish of all. The brighter tan tints come next while a dull—and delightful—Indian red is one of the "novelty shades" of which you may expect to see a good deal during the next few months, its favor being, for the matter of that, likely to increase as Summer merges into Autumn. So you can safely wait till then to adopt it and in the meantime can make yourself charming and cool to look upon.

My Secrets of Beauty---No. 185--The Care of the Ear---

By Mme. LINA CAVALIERI, The Most Famous Living Beauty

MADAME LINA CAVALIERI gives to-day some useful information regarding the proper care of the ears.

Mme. Lina Cavalieri, who is the greatest living beauty, writes each week for this newspaper an article upon the proper care of the person, telling the secrets of her own toilette and giving her own favorite beauty recipes.

By Mme. LINA CAVALIERI

THE ear is the most neglected part of the head. That a pair of ears stand out unduly from the face making what one of your American [illegible] term the accessories of the [illegible] more prominent than the countenance itself, most parents regard as a wise visitation of Providence, or ignore it. Or if the ears are so jammed against the head that one can not see them without an effort, that, too, is liable to be overlooked by parents, not by anyone else who sees the child who is a victim to the malformation.

Be as careful to frame your child's face well as you are to frame a picture, so that its colors are best thrown into relief. Some mothers are artists in the matter of the arrangement of the child's hair, and when this is becomingly done they think their duty done. The ears are neglected.

If they stand out prominently from the head they can be trained, especially in childhood, back into the relation they should bear to the head. An ear harness made of strong cotton tape is made for this purpose and should be worn at night by children or adults who need it. [illegible] better, of course, to use [illegible] in childhood, when the cartilage that forms the outer part of the ear is more plastic, but it is more or less efficacious after you have reached your full growth. It is certainly well worth trying.

If the ear is packed closely against the head train it outward by gentle massage and light pulling, done by yourself. You are the best judge of whether the pulling hurts. If it does, stop. If the ears are less than the normal size they can be enlarged by the same process.

An earache that cannot be quickly relieved by placing loose, warm bandages over it should be brought at once to the doctor's attention, for a persistent earache is often the forerunner of serious conditions, especially of deafness.

Mme. LINA CAVALIERI.

If your ears are delicate, riding in the tunnels may be permanently injurious to them. The greatly increased pressure of air under the rivers is a menace to the eardrum, may cause it to burst and bring about incurable deafness.

You do not know, perhaps, that chronic and severe diseases of the ear often begin in the nose or throat. Wherefore you are taking care of the ear when you keep the throat and the nasal passages free from obstacles. Gargling the throat every morning is a measure for health and cleanliness that no one should neglect. A tablespoonful of salt in a glass of warm water, or a pinch of borax in the same quantity of water, will serve well. But I am inclined to the later belief that no one should douche the nose except by the doctor's order. The liquid you use for the douche might carry germs of disease into the back of the head and cause a general infection, while they might disappear in the natural way if there were no interference with nature's plan of carrying away invaders of the head. If the nose is in healthy condition it secretes a pint of liquid every day and is nature's adequate channel for clearing the head.

But the ear must not be encouraged nor allowed long to "run." A chronic discharge from the ear is a serious condition and may have a fatal end. Hasten with it to a physician. Life insurance companies, knowing how serious this is, will never insure the lives of persons with running ears.

If you blow your nose the nasal passage is clogged, and if you insist upon vigorously blowing your nose you are really blowing it through the ear.

Doctors generally advise us not to try to remove the wax from the ears. They say that if we let the ear alone the wax will finally form into a hard little ball and drop out without assistance. They advise us not to put cotton into the ears unless specially advised to by a reliable physician, who will never give the advice unless the need is imperative. They forbid poulticing or syringing the ears without special advice, and they are quite right in warning against the indiscriminate use of ear drops. Better regard the inner part of the ear as inviolate. So, too, the outer, except for keeping the folds clean. In the cleansing do not handle the ear roughly. Remove the dust from the folds of the ear with a soft cloth, soap and water. Be careful to immediately and thoroughly dry them. If you leave the neck or hair about the ears wet or chilled the earache or neuralgia that will follow may lead to deafness.

Never box a child's ears; it may cause a rupture. Do not pull a child's ears, lest injury follow.

Be sure to have the adenoids removed.

Adenoids in children are a cause of ear troubles, among many others.

Physicians now believe that seasickness is due to ear disturbances.

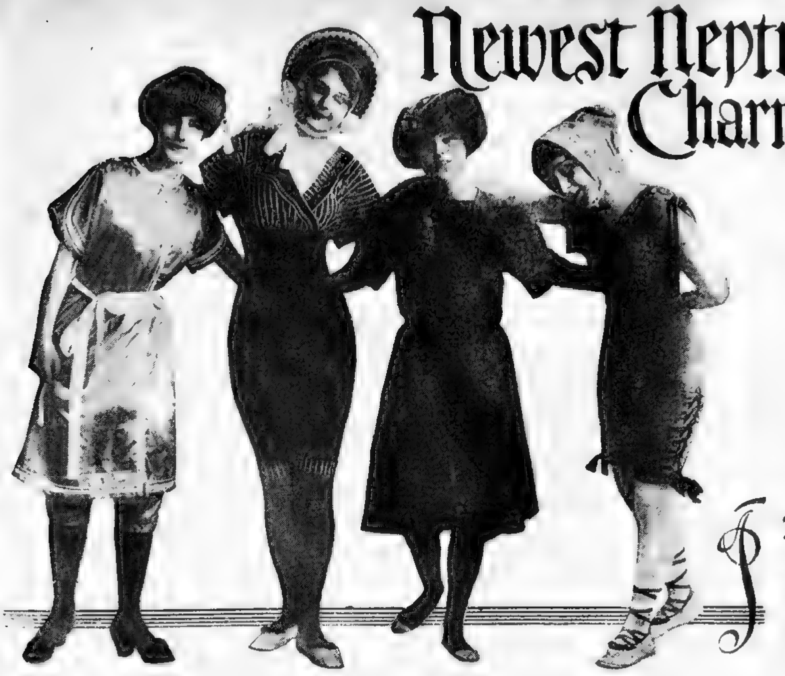
Newest Neptune Charmers

Daring and Attractive Bathing Costumes Which Threaten to Invade Our Sea Shores from the Very Liberal, Gay European Ocean Resorts.



New Types of Bathing Suits Which May Become Popular Her e Before the Summer Is Over.

EACH bathing season brings forth new ideas for costumes in which to honor old Neptune. That old Sea God is responsible [illegible] sartorial marvels. At [illegible] and Narragansett Pier, the [illegible] wear costumes that are little [illegible] of miraculous. One wonders how their wearers dare brave the [illegible] the sun and public opinion in them! These costumes are always [illegible] and Old Neptune adores beauty.

[illegible] in all their daring the Newporters and Piermes have never discarded the skirt. It may be much abbreviated in length, skimped in [illegible] it is a skirt for a' that. In this these American resorts differ from Ostend and other European beaches. Ostend with all its daring, and it is particularly daring this season, frequently affords striking contrasts during the bathing hours. In the pictures given here the silk [illegible] costume sans any suspicion of a skirt is in [illegible] contrast with the full-skirted peasant suit of bright blue silk. But ever-thing and anything goes at Ostend.

The peasant costume has the bodice and skirt cut in one. In color it is a rich brilliant French blue, supple and waterproof. The skirt is ample in width and knee length. The kimono sleeves, slashed and [illegible] with old rose braid, are [illegible] is usual. The knickerbockers are tight fitting and cover the knee. This is an ugly length, but Ostend smiles approval, just because [illegible] different. The ribbon sash [illegible] the left side with long streamers is old rose and all the braid [illegible] are of the same shade. The silk hose and high heeled slippers are of old rose. And the bonnet is a very pretty combination of blue and old rose. Its wearer is known as the blue bird

What a contrast is the scarlet tanager effect produced by the black and scarlet combination in the second figure! The trunks running well up above the waist line are of black silk jersey. The blouse, a full peasant affair, is of black and scarlet striped satin. The effect of this costume is startling even for Ostend, and it takes much to startle this blase old town. The scarlet tanager wears red silk hose and black silk sandals. Her bonnet is charmingly becoming; it is of red silk with black ribbon streamers tied under her left ear in a most fetching manner. Give a French woman a bow of ribbon and she will work a miracle! That bow under the left ear expresses the wearer's temperament fully.

But, oh how different is the sober Jenny Wren standing next to the scarlet tanager! Her costume is practical, prosaic, prudish. It is made of dull green silk, the color of old Neptune on a gray day. The skirt and blouse are very full, the length of the skirt is more than modest and suggests the American and English bathing beaches of a generation ago rather than ultra-modern Ostend. Jenny Wren's slippers and hose are unobtrusive and demure, matching her costume exactly. But Jenny Wren with all her prudishness has a coquettish soul and it shows in her cap! This round full cap of the green silk has two flirtatious rose buds tucked on it just over her left eyebrow. Yes, Ostend's Jenny Wren is not so demure, so prudish, as she looks at first glance.

This wearing of artificial flowers has made a great hit with the European bathers. One frequently sees a fair swimmer with a big bunch of violets or orchids tucked in her girdle and very often tiny rosebuds are used on the slippers instead of buckles. So far, no one has been brave enough to wear a wreath or roses is her hair, Ophelia like, but one never can tell what Ostend will do next!

The fourth of these Ostend beauties is the oriole, and, like the oriole, she is a flash of yellow and black. It is to be hoped that Ostend will never develop a conscience and a bathing censor at the same time Else such picturesque costumes as this of the oriole would be censored out of sight if not out of existence Our oriole wears a yellow silk jersey trunk suit. Underneath [illegible] perhaps, for warmth, she wears fleshlings. The trunks are slashed on the outside of each leg and laced with black silk ribbons. The hose and sandals are yellow, the sandals being laced with the black ribbons. The very fetching bonnet is a chic arrangement of the oriole colors There are days when this Ostend beauty carries a sunshade of her colors and a bunch of brown and yellow daisies. "But I do not swim on those days," she says. "I sit on the beach and make a picture"

And she does not sit alone. By her side are seen a hundred other mermaids displaying their forms in every conceivable mode and color There are mermaids with beautiful faces, there are others with beautiful figures, but all have costumes of unusual beauty.

The color combinations are always striking often bizarre; but the most noticeable costumes, however conspicuous their color, are generally graced by simplicity of design.

These Ostend beauties, the Jenny Wrens, the Tanagers, the blue birds, are all right for Europe; in this country we are not quite ready for them. We shall have to be educated up to them, or, perhaps, down, as you prefer

Several of the bathing costumes pictured on this page would create a furore if worn on any of our beaches, and even the most liberal-minded American receives more or less of a shock when he or she sees them by the dozens on the European beaches for the first time

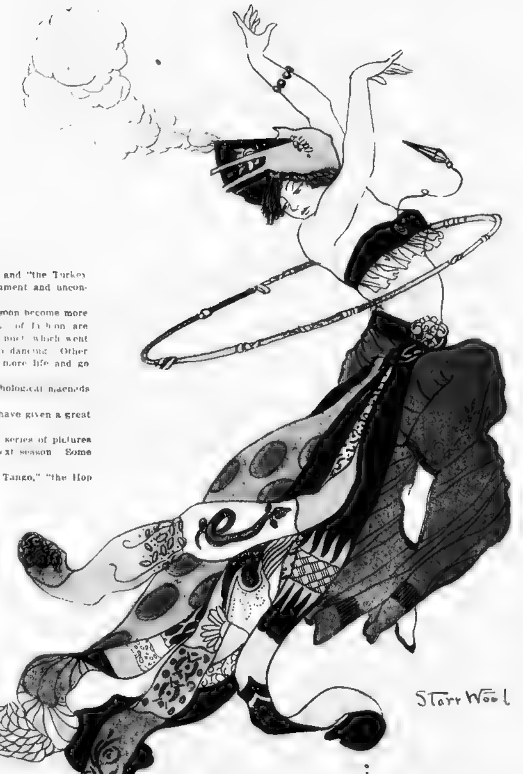
WILL SOCIETY DANCE 'EM?

THE LUN-ANTIC

THE SPOTTED-SOCK SCHOTTISCHE

THE TASSEL TANGO



THE HOP O' MY TOES

THOSE [illegible] able dances, "the Bunny Hug" and "the Turkey Trot," [illegible] far in the direction of abandonment and uncon-ven[illegible]

B[illegible] ever stands still. Dances must soon become more conventional or [illegible] excelled. Some dignified leaders of fashion are urging a return to the stately grace of the gavotte and minuet which went out of fashion about the time George Washington gave up dancing. Other leaders, who don't care [illegible] about dignity, want even more life and go than "the Bunny Hug" and "the Turkey Trot" give us.

The remarkable [illegible]es of the Russian dancers have given a great impetus to art[illegible] their [illegible] dancing in society.

A clever English [illegible] Starr Wood, has made a series of pictures of fashionable dances [illegible] as they will be danced next season. Some of his interesting sketches [illegible] reproduced here.

There [illegible] Spotted [illegible] Schottische," "the Tassel Tango," "the Hop o' My Toes [illegible]" and [illegible] antic Waltz."

Shall we see [illegible] in the ball rooms of society? If so, [illegible] will be a fiercer struggle to get into [illegible] even New York has ever known. [illegible] is said that scores of beautiful and [illegible] young women have been practicing [illegible] of dancing secretly, and are only w[illegible] for a good opportunity to display their [illegible]

In order to execute these dances properly a woman [illegible] have the suppleness of a contortionist and the strength of a champion wrestler. She [illegible] a talent for dancing [illegible] time, the mere sound [illegible] would drive an ordinary [illegible] person crazy.

She [illegible] be as slender as a serpent and as active as a wildcat. Unless she possesses all these qualities the mere attempt to execute [illegible] new dances will cause in[illegible]able mirth.

Perhaps society will be divided more sharply than ever into those who dance and those who can't. The [illegible] dancers will look on and fly to the refreshment room for relief with great frequency.

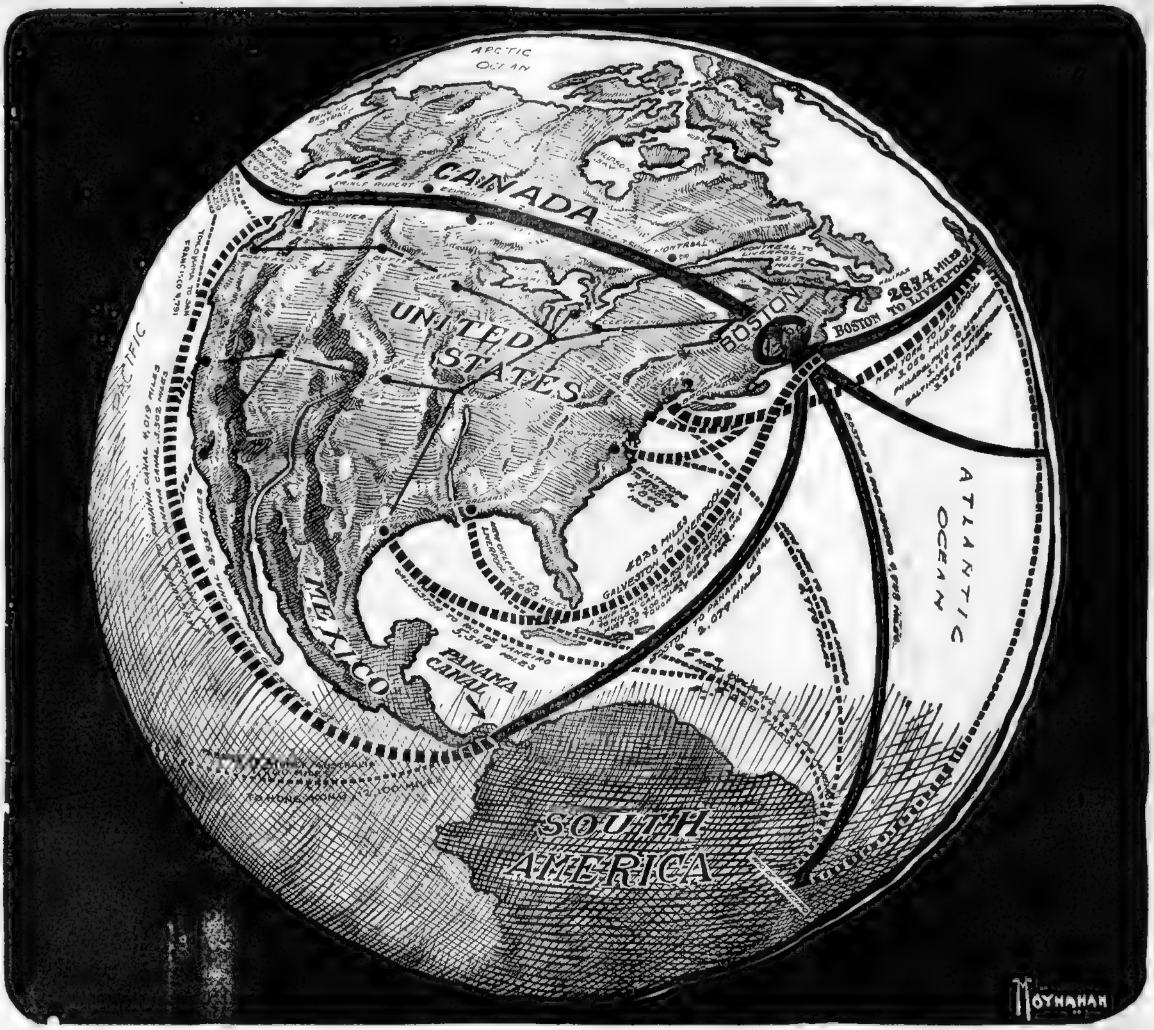
THE GREAT QUESTION--By Gov. Eugene N. Foss

THE GOVERNOR OF MASSACHUSETTS IS THE ACTING-EDITOR OF TODAY'S SUNDAY AMERICAN.

"This is the GREAT Question to be settled at the election in November," says Governor Foss. "The transportation service of Massachusetts must become in fact a PUBLIC service, operated on honest lines without flouting public sentiment, with principal reference to the increasing WELFARE of Massachusetts."



By EUGENE N. FOSS,
Governor of Massachusetts,
Acting Editor of Today's Sunday American.

OVER forty years ago the Legislature, yielding to a public demand, created the Massachusetts Railroad Commission, and then, yielding to railroad pressure, OMITTED TO GIVE THIS COMMISSION ANY EFFECTIVE POWER WHATEVER.

And that is the situation which we still face.

What kind of pressure the railroads used so effectively we need not discuss.

The Railroads and the Legislature

Why We Have No Public Regulation of Transportation — The Railroad Merger.

I am, and have been for many years, a producer and shipper of textiles, machinery, machine tools and other standard Massachusetts products. And my two years' experience as Governor has merely made me sure of what I believed before—that our transportation interests have always dominated the Legislature of Massachusetts.

This is plain talk. Let me make it plainer by saying that this situation exists today—just as surely as it ever did—and that the Legislature of 1912 was as much dominated and directed by the transportation interests as any of its predecessors has been.

The 1912 Legislature, after five months squandered over minor and special legislation, finally yielded to executive pressure—not always mildly phrased—and authorized the entrance of the Grand Trunk Railroad into Boston; thus ostensibly, at least, subjecting the existing roads to direct competition.

PANAMA SHOULD MAKE NEW ENGLAND RICH

The opening of the Panama Canal ought to find New England in position to attract the commerce of Europe and the Orient as well.

Will it do so?

We are practically on the direct ocean line of European steamers to and from Panama and the gulf ports. We hold the advantage of position over nearly every other section on either the Atlantic or Pacific Coast.

A steamer leaving Galveston for Liverpool can call at Boston by making a detour of only 139 miles in a voyage of nearly 5,000 miles.

From New Orleans to Liverpool is 4,680 miles, and a stop at Boston would add only 90 miles.

We are nearer to Rio de Janeiro than New York is; nearer than even New Orleans, by approximately 500 miles; nearer than New York by 30 miles.

Panama and the increasing gulf commerce ought to make New England rich; but not unless we wake up to our opportunities.

—From Governor Foss' Editorial

BUT BY REFUSING POINTBLANK TO GIVE ANY REAL POWERS TO THE RAILROAD COMMISSION, OR ANY OTHER COMMISSION, OVER THE WHOLE RAILROAD FIELD, THIS SAME LEGISLATURE STULTIFIED ITSELF, AGAIN DEMONSTRATED ITS SUBSERVIENCY TO THE TRANSPORTATION INTERESTS, AND LEFT THE GRAND TRUNK TO THOSE SECRET DEALS AND SCHEMES ON WHICH OUR EXISTING LINES ARE EVEN NOW BELIEVED TO BE AT WORK WITH THE VIEW OF FORESTALLING ANY REAL COMPETITION

The railroad transportation of New England is mainly in the control of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, directly through that road's own trackage and indirectly through its ownership of the stock of the Boston Railroad Holding Company, which in turn dominates the Boston & Maine Railroad.

This public scandal was consummated when the Massachusetts Legislature of 1909, at the suggestion of my predecessor, created this Holding Company for the express and declared purpose of purchasing Boston & Maine stock and selling the control of it to the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.

This consolidation was put through on the pretence that the Holding Company, a Massachusetts corporation, would hold the stock under Massachusetts laws, and that the railroad property thus represented would be subject to Massachusetts regulation.

BUT IT IS SIGNIFICANT THAT NO STEPS WHATEVER WERE TAKEN TO ESTABLISH ANY ACTUAL REGULATION OF THE RAILROAD SERVICE.

This transaction is still too fresh in the public mind to need further comment now.

So much for the Legislature at this point. Later on we shall refer to it again in equally gentle terms.

Suffice it to say that we have no public regulation of transportation today for these reasons:

First—The transportation interests do not want it.

Second—They are strong enough in the Legislature to defeat, thus far, every attempt to enforce such regulation.

A railroad is, in principle, a public highway; but, because special machinery, equipment and organization are necessary to run it, the public turns it over to be operated by a corporation, for the service of the public, just as the gas and electric (and in some places the water) supply is turned over to private enterprise.

The Railroads and the Rights of the People

Public Service; What It Ought to Be—Valuable Franchise Given Without Payment.

Such a "public service" corporation is therefore in effect an agent of the public. It has acquired from the public, by charter, a franchise or "concession" usually of great value, being worth, in many cases, tens of millions of dollars.

True, the public rarely if ever receives any cash consideration for this concession.

A benevolent Legislature usually sees to it that the public, at least, does not get a cent.

This fact is one of the festered spots upon the poli-

HOW TO BUILD UP THE PORT OF BOSTON

Bring more steamships to Boston and the railroads will be compelled to co-operate, as at New York. The arrested development of the Port of Boston, commercially, for the past forty years is a matter of grave peril to all New England property.—From Governor Foss' editorial.

tica of America—but it is none the less a fact.

In Massachusetts the people have not received any cash consideration for turning over valuable railroad franchises to private corporations; on the contrary, the Commonwealth has invested many millions of the public money to help the railroads. The Commonwealth spent $10,000,000 on the Hoosac Tunnel alone. She has spent more than $25,000,000 thus far in assisting the development of her railroad service.

The first duty of such a corporation—so enriched by the public through its franchise—and through public funds—is to render satisfactory public service.

That is what it is for.

If it can do this and pay good dividends, too, then so much the better for everybody—but in any event it must render efficient public service; good service, at a fair price and on equal terms to all.

Unfortunately, the directors of our existing railroads do not see the matter in this light. An efficient and satisfactory railroad service, with modern equipment, and on equitable terms to all users, and all districts, does not exist in this State.

THE New York, New Haven & Hartford is, of course, controlled in New York, in common with many other great railroad systems under New York management.

These great financial interests naturally enough regard these railroads as their private property, from which as a whole a handsome income can be extracted

The Railroads and "Big Business"

From the Wall Street point of view it is of extremely little consequence whether this plan is, or is not, what the people want.

Now an ordinary business enterprise is almost wholly dependent upon satisfying its customers; but a RAILROAD MONOPOLY WITHOUT PUBLIC REGULATION IS WHOLLY INDEPENDENT OF THE WISHES AND INTERESTS OF ITS PATRONS

It is independent because it is a monopoly, without competition.

It is doubly independent because it is a monopoly which the people themselves have created and empowered under special grants and charters.

That is the railroad situation in New England today. The "New Haven" is a New York monopoly; a monopoly created by our own public charters and franchises; a monopoly not checked by any sort of real or effective public supervision; and which plays with the welfare of New England only to suit its own greater game in New York.

A situation such as that is contrary to the principles of a democracy like the United States and is out of place in Massachusetts—in Boston—"the cradle of our liberties."

Under any circumstances this would be significant, but the special circumstances surrounding Massachusetts make it of the deepest significance—the utmost consequence—to the people of this State and of all New England.

These special circumstances are as follows:

(1) Massachusetts is a great producing State. She manufactures goods which require transportation to all quarters of the continent, and in fact to all parts of the world. Her prosperity depends upon having a first-class transportation service for her output.

(2) Massachusetts, with all her great industries, does not furnish her own raw materials. For her coal, her pig iron, her steel, her hides, her cotton and her wool she is necessarily a buyer from other States. And so, for her raw materials, she is absolutely at the mercy of those very railroads which she neither owns nor regulates.

THE railroad and financial interests of New York are now practically all-powerful to make or break the commerce of any point, according to their good will and pleasure, in default of sufficient local enterprise

At Boston we have ONE OF THE VERY FINEST OCEAN HARBORS IN THE WORLD

The Railroads and Steamship Lines

Why New England Suffers—Liverpool an Example for Boston—Building Up the Port of Boston — Panama Should Make New England Rich.

But we cannot get the benefit of this harbor unless we use our railroad and marine services conjointly as mutual parts of the same general service.

My entire plan for the development of the PORT OF BOSTON, now well under way, is based on the conviction that the people of Massachusetts will surely demand and secure the railroad service which a seaport requires

Without that service your seaport might as well be on the Shetland Islands

Boston holds, geographically, a strategic position for a great commercial port

If our railroad interests had been managed with the public advantage as their principal aim, we would today possess one of the most active and best-equipped seaports in the world

The railroad interests and the financial powers back of them know how to build up sea traffic; and they have done it admirably at New York; for at that point it was to their immediate advantage to do so

But at Boston these same interests have considered that their advantage lay rather in suppressing sea traffic; even leasing our docks to forestall competition; then making discriminatory rates against Boston, diverting commerce to New York and Philadelphia, and letting their Boston docks lie relatively idle.

I am not writing only of the direct self interest of Massachusetts or Boston, but of the WELFARE OF THE WHOLE OF NEW ENGLAND.

Boston, as a seaport, railroad terminal and metropolis, is the natural commercial and financial headquarters of New England. Here is the greatest centre of population, here the principal banking is done, and here are the great wholesale and supply houses for the industries of New England

Whatever benefits Boston HELPS NEW ENGLAND, and if the transportation system of this district is not run in the public interest of the whole section, then Boston is the first to suffer and her injury is reflected throughout New England.

The arrested development of Boston during the past forty years, commercially, is a matter of grave peril to every town and city throughout New England.

New York, aided in its development by competing and yet co-operating railroad and steamship interests, now ranks with London as a commercial port.

The value of New York's foreign commerce in 1911 was $1,654,145,000; that of Boston was only $188,131,000. This is about one-ninth of the amount of New York.

Nobody can claim that this represents anything like a fair or natural economic division of business as between New York and Boston, with her magnificent harbor and her availability as a port for European trade.

Even New Orleans exceeded our record, with $239,000,000 of foreign business, and Galveston beat us with $224,000,000.

Montreal, a port severely handicapped by her northern latitude, and closed by heavy ice during six months of the year, but assisted by the Canadian railroads, substantially equalled Boston, with $185,000,000 of foreign trade.

Governor Foss Blames the Boston Elevated Railway Company for the Hold-up of the North Station-South Station Tunnel and for Blocking the Electrification of the Railroads.

The railroads have been willing for years to connect the North and South Stations by a tunnel, but this plan has been fought by the Elevated because of the fear that the railroads, with this tunnel established, would compete with the metropolitan five-cent service of the Elevated System

During the 1912 Legislature the bitterest opposition to my proposal for the electrification of steam railroads entering Boston came not from them but from the Elevated interests. AND I NOW MAKE THE PUBLIC STATEMENT THAT THE ELECTRIFICATION OF ALL THE LINES ENTERING BOSTON WAS IN MY BELIEF DEFEATED CHIEFLY BY THE INFLUENCE OF THE ELEVATED IN THE MASSACHUSETTS LEGISLATURE.

Each system fights the other when legislation favoring its rival is pending, but they combine to influence the Legislature when their common interests are affected. From Governor Foss' Editorial

Our dominant railroads have succeeded till this year in keeping these same Canadian roads OUT OF BOSTON

Last year the total value of the United States exports and imports was $3,576,546,000. Of this, New York got 46 per cent., but Boston, although occupying an extremely favorable natural position and having practically limitless financial resources, handled only 5 2 per cent. Galveston got 6.3 per cent. and New Orleans 6.6 per cent. Philadelphia got 4 3 per cent. and Baltimore 3 per cent.

We are loath to applaud the progressive methods of European countries, but we must admit that the GREAT MODERN SEAPORTS of Hamburg, Antwerp, and Liverpool have not been left to the CAPRICE OF RAILROAD FAVOR. They have been built up by the STRONG ARM OF GOVERNMENT, irrespective of any private railroad influence whatever

They therefore represent among themselves a normal distribution of freight, and they have accordingly enriched their surrounding territories

LONDON and Liverpool are comparable in their relative positions to New York and Boston But for every hundred dollars' worth of foreign commerce at London, Liverpool has over ninety, while for every hundred dollars' worth handled at New York, Boston gets $11.

Is it wise to leave these adjustments to the railroads and "high finance" when the public has the power to readjust them?

Boston as Rival to New York

London and Liverpool Comparable in Their Relations to These Two Cities

Liverpool, like Boston, is the centre of a GREAT INDUSTRIAL TERRITORY in which are concentrated the great British textile interests, and which further resembles the territory surrounding Boston in its great production of fine machinery, machine tools, hardware and general merchandise

Since 1857 the dock system of Liverpool has been under the control of a public board, which consists of twenty-eight members, twenty-four of whom are elected by the local taxpayers, and four appointed by a board of government commissioners having jurisdiction over the Mersey river.

This dock board has borrowed $125,000,000 thus far at rates varying from 2½ per cent. to 4½ per cent. Yet the recent proposition of the Board of Directors of the Port of Boston to borrow $25,000,000 for the development of the port of Boston causes the railroad interests which dominate Massachusetts the greatest amusement.

Liverpool possesses its wonderful port, with its import and export business rivaling that of London, BECAUSE THIS DEVELOPMENT, INSTEAD OF BEING LEFT TO PRIVATE TRANSPORTATION INTERESTS, HAS BEEN FORCED BY PUBLIC ENTERPRISE, THOUGH NOT AT PUBLIC EXPENSE

I doubt whether the people of New England realize fully that Boston is practically the only great harbor in the world which has not been freed from railroad domination and developed by public enterprise; that is to say, by public management vested with authority to raise money by bond issues, or other suitable means

London has invested $186,000,000 in the development of her port Liverpool $125,000,000; Manchester, practically an inland city, has made herself a seaport by the investment of $90,000,000; Glasgow has invested $40,000,000 in her harbor; Newcastle, $80,000,000; Bristol, $30,000,000; Hamburg, $100,000,000; Antwerp, $45,000,000; and even Montreal has spent more in the development of her port than we have spent in the commercial development of Boston Harbor

These sums do not represent an expense to the taxpayers. Capital is derived from bond issues on which a substantial return is earned

For example, at Glasgow, for the fiscal year of 1906-7, the expenditure, including interest, maintenance and management for the entire dock system, was two and a half million, but the revenue amounted to $2,740,000

At Liverpool the annual interest on the dock investment for the same year was $4,327,000 The dock tonnage rates received alone amounted to $3,200,000, and warehouse receipts to $1,000,000

No matter how much progress we make in the control of our railroads, this progress will not bring its FULL BENEFIT to the public unless at the same time we demand the development of our WATER TRANSPORTATION.

It is the DUTY of the hour for the people of Massachusetts to see that this is done

Massachusetts, being a manufacturing State, drawing her raw materials in from other States, and sending out her finished products, would benefit enormously by the development and use of her seaports. The ideal condition for a domestic industry is that in which you receive your raw materials by barge, lighter or freight steamer, at a very low cost for freight, utilizing the faster railroad service to send out your higher grade freight that is, your finished product. But the railroads serving Boston have been successful, to a very marked degree, in keeping control of the transportation of both the raw materials and the finished product

The established policy of Massachusetts Legislatures in doing just what the railroads ask and leaving them FREE OF ALL MANDATORY REGULATION is very largely responsible for these results. However much the fault may lie with the railroads, it rests twice as heavily upon the policy of the State.

This is no matter of personal ambition to me as Governor; it is a matter on which the future of New England depends It is not a matter of politics; but of business and prosperity. Boston is the second largest seaport of America, thanks to her coastwise trade; but even so, the value of her foreign commerce is over fifty years behind that of New York. BUT FOR ALMOST FIFTY YEARS NEW YORK HAS MAINTAINED THE POLICY OF PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF HER PORT FACILITIES; RECENTLY SHE HAS STRENGTHENED THIS POLICY AND HAS NOW ADDED TO IT THE MANDATORY PUBLIC REGULATION OF HER RAILROADS

The failure of our 1912 Legislature to grant us such public regulation brings the commercial life of New England to a definite crisis

If we do not act now, we never shall. The opening of the Panama Canal ought to find New England in position to attract the commerce of Europe, and the Orient as well. Will it do so?

We are practically on the direct ocean line of European steamers to and from Panama and the gulf ports. We hold the advantage of position over nearly every other section on either the Atlantic or Pacific coast.

A steamer leaving Galveston for Liverpool can call at Boston by making a detour of only 139 miles in a voyage of nearly five thousand miles. From New Orleans to Liverpool is 4,680 miles, and a stop at Boston would add only ninety miles.

We are nearer to Rio de Janeiro than New York is; nearer than even New Orleans, by approximately five hundred miles; nearer than New York by thirty miles. Panama and the increasing gulf commerce ought to make New England rich; but not unless we wake up to our opportunities.

The port of Boston acquires added importance through the coming of the Grand Trunk Railroad, which will put us directly in touch with the rapidly growing cities of central and western Canada. Montreal is getting this business now, in spite of her serious natural handicaps. Practically closed by ice for half the year, she nevertheless rivals Boston in the values of her exports and imports. And Boston is closed by our own failure to develop and utilize this splendid seaport. But public enterprise put ten million dollars into the docks and channels of Montreal before Massachusetts woke up to the needs of Boston Harbor.

Now, as a matter of fact, Boston, with the other splendid harbors within the Gulf of Maine, offers the most logical outlet for Canada to the East. Shall we permit ourselves to lose all the advantages which the Canadian roads ought to bring to Boston? Or shall we build up the port of Boston and make it rival Liverpool as the great Northern port of the country?

The wonderful industrial and agricultural development now going on throughout Canada ought to force us into developing our rail and water connections; so that we may secure our share of Canadian business and Canadian prosperity. At Montreal the government has under way plans which, in spite of the snow and the ice of Montreal, will send that port so far ahead of us that it will be impossible for us to catch up again, unless we act now.

We must not sit passively and see the Grand Trunk bottled up, or its potential benefits for Boston and New England nullified either by railroad schemes or public indifference

One of the exploded bogies that have kept Boston back is the notion that we have now all the facilities we need. We have all the facilities that the railroad interests of New York want us to have—and all that they care to use. But not enough for our own needs. AND NO SORT OF EQUIPMENT WOULD BE OF ANY USE TO BOSTON WITHOUT THE RIGHT PUBLIC POLICY BACK OF IT.

Even if it were true that Boston today is well equipped with water terminals used in conjunction with rail terminals, so far as her present needs go, even then the public duty of port development would not be lessened. THE GREATEST SEAPORTS OF THE WORLD HAVE BEEN BUILT UP AFTER PUBLIC CONSCIOUSNESS HAD BEEN AROUSED TO THEIR NATURAL ADVANTAGES, AND IN ANTICIPATION OF FUTURE TRADE. THIS IS ESPECIALLY TRUE OF LIVERPOOL, HAMBURG AND ANTWERP.

Let me quote from the recent report of the Canadian Marine and Fisheries, on British and Continental ports, to the same effect:

> The ports that are doing the biggest business, and doing it most efficiently, are the ports that have kept their facilities ahead of actual requirements.

And again:

> The ports that have remained stationary or lost in prestige have been those (that) neglected to provide facilities BEFORE BUSINESS WAS FORCED TO SEEK ELSEWHERE. * * * BUSINESS FOLLOWS THE FACILITIES.

Boston, let us say it to our shame, is one of these "ports that have remained stationary or lost in prestige."

THE REPORT QUOTED IS AN ELOQUENT PLEA FOR THE FURTHER DEVELOPMENT OF MONTREAL TO SECURE THAT VERY FREIGHT WHICH WE HAVE NEGLECTED TO HOLD FOR OUR SEAPORT.

To let some important public improvement go by default until its loss has wrought havoc with local interests is sheer nonsense. The argument that we are not ready for port development has not a leg to stand on. The same argument has delayed for many years the electrification of our railroads; and has done more than any other single thing to stunt the growth of Boston. The same argument has defeated the tunnel which ought to connect the North and South Stations in Boston; and it is the same argument, always reappearing in some new form, that has held back every modern improvement in all lines of progress until the utter folly of delay has been demonstrated.

However much we may blame the railroads for our transportation troubles, a far greater weight of blame rests upon the public policy of the State in leaving undeveloped her wonderful natural harbors, and especially the port of Boston.

With the recent establishment of a State board for the express purpose of building up the port of Boston,

Governor Foss Says:

The Legislature of 1912 was not only subservient to the transportation interests, but was affected by influences almost as sordid, namely, partisan bias. During my struggle to secure public service regulation, I was told repeatedly by prominent members of the Legislature that they were in sympathy with me, that they heartily believed in my plan for public regulation of the railroads, but that, as Republicans, they could not allow me—a Democratic Governor—the credit of accomplishing it.

public policy has taken a thoroughly progressive step. The responsibility now rests squarely upon the Directors of the Port of Boston, and the Massachusetts public will demand of them the fullest measure of successful efforts.

An expenditure of nine million dollars has been authorized by the Legislature, and the public is already impatient to see this sum well spent upon construction work. With a public expenditure of only ten million dollars Montreal has been able to handle much greater amounts of shipping (during the ice-free months) than we have; and it is high time to begin work in Boston Harbor.

BESIDES the hostility of the big New York railroads to our seaport development, we have the LONG-STANDING JEALOUSY between the steam roads and the street railways.

The New Haven system has at times taken the initiative in planning the development of its service; but at such times it has been checkmated by the powerful influence of our dominant electric lines in the Legislature.

The Railroads and the Trolley Lines

How Each System Has Fought the Other—Electrification and the Tunnel—The Western Trolley Merger and the Veto.

There has always existed a bitter rivalry between these two great systems—steam and electric—in Massachusetts.

It ought to work out to the advantage of the public that our steam and electric lines should operate in competition, but whenever either system has asked for permission to develop its service, it has been successfully opposed to some extent by the other.

For example, New Englanders are familiar with the struggle which the railroad interests made to prevent the extension of the Elevated to Forest Hills. It is also common knowledge that the transportation interests succeeded for many years in "persuading" the public authorities not to grant a charter to the Boston & Eastern line.

Again the railroads have been willing for years to connect the North and South Stations by a tunnel, but this plan has been FOUGHT BY THE ELEVATED because of the fear that the railroads, with this tunnel established, would compete with the metropolitan five-cent service of the Elevated system.

During the 1912 Legislature the bitterest opposition to my proposal for the electrification of steam railroads entering Boston came not from them but from the Elevated interests, and I now make the PUBLIC STATEMENT that the ELECTRIFICATION OF ALL THE LINES ENTERING BOSTON WAS IN MY BEHALF DEFEATED CHIEFLY BY THE INFLUENCE OF THE ELEVATED IN THE MASSACHUSETTS LEGISLATURE.

Each system fights the other when legislation favoring its rival is pending; but they combine to influence the Legislature when their common interests are affected.

How shortsighted this mutual jealousy between the two systems is can be readily understood.

Both managements should be broadminded enough to see that their own future rests upon the further development of this great New England metropolis.

Unquestionably, each extension of the Elevated takes from the railroads certain "short haul" passenger traffic.

Undoubtedly, the electrification of the railroads entering Boston would divert some suburban traffic temporarily from the street railways.

But in the course of years these various changes would offset each other, and both systems would benefit enormously by giving not only to Boston, but to all New England, the best transportation service that modern engineering and modern management can produce.

During the legislative session of 1912 the public witnessed the most OUTRAGEOUS ATTEMPT that was ever made by our dominant railroad interests TO BOTTLE UP THE TROLLEY LINES of the State.

For many years these interests had been illegally acquiring control of our trolley lines.

These schemes have become so odious and so widely known that I need not review them here.

The culmination of the whole illegal plan appeared last Winter in a bill introduced into the Legislature to incorporate the Worcester, Springfield & Berkshire Street Railway Company, under the ownership of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad in open defiance of the established statutes of this State.

This plot could not be put through without making some concession to the popular demand for public regulation. Therefore, the railroad, while successfully fighting against my plan for a State-wide public regulation of transportation, offered the people as a bribe, in this case, that the trolley lines at issue should be subject to a sort of mandatory supervision by the State.

The railroad, playing upon the earnest desire of the hill towns of Western Massachusetts for an extension of the rural trolley service, expected to break down my well-known opposition to this plan of aggrandizement without general regulation.

The New Haven scheme, after years of fighting for the control of our only independent trolley lines, was to accomplish this result by a bold attack on the Legislature.

The western trolley lines are now owned mainly by the New Haven, and the New England Investment and Security Company, a voluntary association presumably controlled by the New Haven.

In the merger bill these owners admit the necessity of extending these roads and they promise to extend them to the hill towns. They are committed to this issue.

WE MUST COMPEL THEM TO MEET IT, WITHOUT SACRIFICING THE FIXED POLICY OF THE STATE, since they have conceded that a public exigency exists We do not need to sell out to the New Haven to get the public service to which we are entitled. The public demand has only to be sufficiently pressed to get it on a fair basis

The one big object of the railroad was to strengthen its hold on the trolley situation in Massachusetts; to undermine the only remaining competition that now bothers it, and to FASTEN ITS GRIP more firmly upon this State.

But the duty of the public and the Governor does not end with the defeat of this game of "high finance." The people of Central Massachusetts are in great need today of increased transportation facilities, and I propose to see that they get them on lines consistent with our established public policy.

Each section of the State must co-operate with all the other sections in a UNANIMOUS DEMAND for transportation service UNDER STATE CONTROL. Whether this service is operated by private or public capital is a relatively small matter. The only big thing is that whoever runs it shall run it for the benefit of the public.

THIS is the great question to be settled at the election in November—the transportation service of Massachusetts must become in fact a PUBLIC SERVICE, operated on honest lines, without flouting public sentiment, without a lobby, and with principal reference to the increasing welfare of Massachusetts and New England.

Our transportation systems, whether steam or electric, must be operated just as much to the public advantage as if they were a public enterprise, financed by the taxpayers of New England.

The Next Legislature

The Transportation Problem—Pledges to Be Demanded From Candidates—The Transportation Lobby Must Be Abolished

PRIVATE OWNERSHIP of the railroads is not a fundamental principle, but only AN EXPEDIENT, in the development of this country.

Let our first effort be to secure an adequate public service from the existing transportation properties, without forcing them into public ownership. But in any event we must have satisfactory public service.

To secure THE PUBLIC SERVICE WHICH WE ARE ENTITLED TO, but which we have never yet received, the following steps are necessary, and I prophecy that the people of Massachusetts will take them next November:

A.—Every candidate for public office, whether in the Senate, House of Representatives, or the Executive Department, should be publicly pledged, and, without any equivocation or evasion, to do away with the existing Railroad Commission and to establish in its place a public service commission armed with ample authority to enforce from the railroads the right use of the property which the public has placed in their hands.

B.—The nefarious lobby must be evicted from the State House, and legislation passed which will ensure heavy sentences for any transportation official or employe who attempts wrongly to influence the vote of a public servant against the issue of public regulation.

Pledges themselves, however drastic, are not enough. The public must not let up in its demand upon its public servants, even after they have been elected.

The Legislature must understand that the people are in dead earnest about this matter, and are not to be fooled again.

The Legislature of 1912 was not only DOMINATED BY THE TRANSPORTATION INTERESTS, but it was affected by influences almost as sordid, namely, partisan bias

I speak with moderation, but I feel strongly that every legislator who permitted himself to be influenced against the public good by mere partisan expediency in this vital matter, violated his oath of office and proved his disloyalty to the State.

During my struggle with the Legislature to secure public regulation, I was told repeatedly by prominent members of the Legislature that they were IN SYMPATHY with me, that they heartily BELIEVED in my plan for public regulation of the railroads, but that, AS REPUBLICANS, they could not allow me—a Democratic Governor—the credit of accomplishing it.

If there is one supreme and crowning evil in our system of politics, surely it was exemplified in this attitude of the Massachusetts Legislature.

The result is that the people of Massachusetts, whatever their party allegiance, are left WITHOUT PUBLIC REGULATION OF THE RAILROADS.

Of what possible interest is it to the business men of Massachusetts, to the manufacturers and shippers of freight, or to the "commuters," on our suburban lines, whether the public regulation of our railroads is secured by a Republican or a Democratic Governor—provided it IS secured?

If the Legislature of Massachusetts, however, is determined that this shall remain a partisan matter, then I CALL UPON THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE to take up the issue on that basis and to make it a partisan issue. If the people of the State, after forty years of almost unbroken Republican Legislatures, and now convinced that a Republican Legislature untainted by transportation influence is impossible, then let us all resolve upon a Democratic Legislature.

I hope for the credit of the State, and for the future of American politics, that we can raise this issue above a mere partisan basis, and that the progressive Republicans of the State will combine with the Democrats to change the face of the Massachusetts Legislature, to recreate it out of new material, and to demand of every man who goes into it that for once he shall do his full duty, whatever his party designation.

Moreover, we must all remember that mere "muckraking" of the railroads is of no benefit whatever. These great corporations are not enemies of the public; their directors, in squeezing every possible cent of tribute for inferior service, are only obeying the demands of their stockholders, and following the doubtful methods of "high finance." Their one big mistake is in forgetting that the railroads exist only BY PERMISSION OF THE PEOPLE AND FOR THE PUBLIC SERVICE. Our mistake would be to permit them to continue in that way of thinking.

Create real, red-blooded public supervision, and the railroads will do as they are told. Build up the port of Boston, keep the dock dues down, and encourage steamship lines to come here—and then you will see the railroads all scurrying to CO-OPERATE and get their share of the business.

Then, again, it is of small moment how big a railroad corporation becomes, provided always that the PUBLIC POWER over it is greater still. Without this public power, even the poorest little lumber road in the New England forests would not respect the public welfare. Without it, our present railroads feel independent of public sentiment. It is only our own fault if we cannot change this.

My principal aim, in again becoming a candidate for the Governorship, is to secure PUBLIC CO-OPERATION in compelling the establishment of EFFICIENT PUBLIC SERVICE FROM STEAM AND ELECTRIC TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES.

There is nothing radical in this program. Nineteen other States have powerful commissions with real powers over railroads and other public services. Eleven additional States have railroad commissions armed with similar powers.

We have no public service commission, and our railroad commission is armed with no REAL powers whatever to compel EFFICIENT PUBLIC SERVICE.

I propose that this Commonwealth shall be the NEXT STATE to secure for its people THE POWER TO ENFORCE PROPER SERVICE FROM THE TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES. The future of the State depends on it. Our factories, our shops and warehouses, our industries and all our local business interests are hanging on this issue. Our real estate values are waiting for this more than for anything else to reach the high figures that the natural advantages of New England should give them.

We must REGULATE OUR RAILROADS, DEVELOP OUR ELECTRIC LINES, STIMULATE THE COMMERCE OF OUR GREAT SEAPORTS, and LAUNCH NEW ENGLAND ON A NEW PERIOD OF PROSPERITY AND COMMERCIAL LEADERSHIP.

Eugene N. Foss

Dr. Jephsons Statement—By A. Conan Doyle

IN the month of December in the year 1873, the British ship Dei Gratia steered into Gibraltar, towing the derelict brigantine Marie Celeste, which had been picked up in latitude 38 degrees 40 minutes, longitude 17 degrees 15 minutes W. There were several circumstances in connection with the condition and appearance of this abandoned vessel which excited considerable comment at the time, and aroused a curiosity which has never been satisfied. What these circumstances were was summed up in an able article which appeared in the Gibraltar Gazette.

"We have ourselves," says the anonymous writer in the Gazette, "been over the derelict Marie Celeste, and have closely questioned the officers of the Dei Gratia on every point which might throw light on the affair. They are of opinion that she had been abandoned several days, or perhaps weeks, before being picked up. The official log, which was found in the cabin, states that the vessel sailed from Boston to Lisbon, starting upon October 16. It is, however, most imperfectly kept, and affords little information. There is no reference to rough weather, and, indeed, the state of the vessel's paint and rigging excludes the idea that she was abandoned for any such reason. She is perfectly watertight. No signs of a struggle or of violence are to be detected, and there is absolutely nothing to account for the disappearance of the crew.

"There are several indications that a lady was present on board, a sewing machine being found in the cabin and some articles of female attire. These probably belonged to the captain's wife, who is mentioned in the log as having accompanied her husband. As an instance of the mildness of the weather, it may be remarked that a bobbin of silk was found standing upon the sewing machine, though the least roll of the vessel would have precipitated it to the floor. The boats were intact and slung upon the davits; and the cargo, consisting of tallow and American clocks, was untouched. An old-fashioned sword of curious workmanship was discovered among some lumber in the forecastle, and this weapon is said to exhibit a longitudinal striation of steel, as if it had been recently wiped. It has been placed in the hands of the police, and submitted to Dr. Monaghan, the analyst, for inspection. The result of his examination has not yet been published.

"We may remark, in conclusion, that Captain Dalton, of the Dei Gratia, an able and intelligent seaman, is of the opinion that the Marie Celeste may have been abandoned at a considerable distance from the spot at which she was picked up, since a powerful current runs up in that latitude from the African coast. He confesses his inability, however, to advance any hypothesis which can reconcile all the facts in the case. In an utter absence of a clue or grain of evidence, it is to be feared that the fate of the crew of the Marie Celeste will be added to those numerous mysteries of the deep which will never be solved until the great day when the sea gives up its dead. If crime has been committed, as is much to be suspected, there is little hope of bringing the perpetrators to justice."

I shall supplement this extract from the Gibraltar Gazette by quoting a telegram from Boston, which went the round of the English papers, and represented the total amount of information which had been collected about the Marie Celeste.

"She was," it said, "a brigantine of 170 tons burden, and belonged to White, Russell & White, wine importers, of this city. Captain J. W. Tibbs was an old servant of the firm and was a man of known ability and tried probity. He was accompanied by his wife, aged thirty-one, and their youngest child, five years old. The crew consisted of seven hands, including two colored seamen, and a boy. There were three passengers, one of whom was a well-known Brooklyn specialist on consumption, Dr. Habakuk Jephson, who was a distinguished advocate of Abolition in the early days of the movement, and whose pamphlet, entitled "Where Is THY Brother" exercised a strong influence on public opinion before the war. The other passengers were Mr. J. Harton, a writer in the employ of the firm, and Mr. Septimus Goring, a half-caste gentleman, from New Orleans. All investigations have failed to throw any light upon the fate of these fourteen human beings. The loss of Dr. Jephson will be felt in both political and scientific circles."

I have here epitomized, for the benefit of the public, all that has been hitherto known concerning the Marie Celeste and her crew, for the past ten years have not in any way helped to elucidate the mystery.

My father, William K. Jephson, was a preacher of the sect called Plymouth Brethren, and was one of the most respected citizens of Lowell. Like most of the other Puritans of New England, he was a determined opponent to slavery, and it was from his lips that I received those lessons which tinged every action of my life. While I was studying medicine at Harvard University, I had already made a mark as an advanced Abolitionist, and when, after taking my degree, I bought a third share of the practice of Dr. Willis, of Brooklyn, I managed, in spite of my professional duties, to devote a considerable time to the cause which I had at heart, my pamphlet, "Where Is Thy Brother?" (Swarburgh, Lister Co., 1859) attracting considerable attention.

When the war broke out I left Brooklyn and accompanied the One Hundred and Thirteenth New York Regiment through the campaign. I was present at the second battle of Bull's Run and at the battle of Gettysburg. Finally, I was severely wounded at Antietam, and would probably have perished on the field had it not been for the kindness of a gentleman named Murray, who had me carried to his house and provided me with every comfort. Thanks to his charity, and to the nursing which I received from his black domestics, I was soon able to get about the plantation with the help of a stick. It was during this period of convalescence that an incident occurred which is closely connected with my story.

Among the most assiduous of the negresses who had watched my couch during my illness there was one old crone who appeared to exert considerable authority over the others. She was exceedingly attentive to me, and I gathered from the few words that passed between us that she had heard of me, and that she was grateful to me for championing her oppressed race.

One day as I was sitting alone on the veranda, basking in the sun, and debating whether I should rejoin Grant's army, I was surprised to see this old creature hobbling toward me. After looking cautiously around to see that we were alone, she fumbled in the front of her dress and produced a small chamois leather bag which was hung round her neck by a white cord.

"Massa," she said, bending down and croaking the words into my ear, "me die soon. Me very old woman. Not stay long on Massa Murray's plantation."

"You may live a long time yet, Martha," I answered. "You know I am a doctor. If you feel ill let me know about it, and I will try to cure you."

"No wish to live—wish to die. I'm gwine to join the heavenly host." Here she relapsed into one of those half-heathenish rhapsodies in which negroes indulge. "But, massa, me have one thing must leave behind me when I go. No able to take it with me across the Jordan. That one thing very precious, more precious and more holy than all things else in the world. Me, a poor black woman, have this because my people, very great people, gave it to me, back in the old country. But you cannot understand this same as black folk could. My fader gave it to me, and his fader gave it him, but now who shall I give it to? Poor Martha hab no child, no relation, nobody. All around I see black man very bad man. Black woman very stupid woman. Nobody worthy of the stone. And so I say, Here is Massa Jephson, what write books and fight for colored folk—he must be a good man, and he shall have it, though he is a white man, and nebber can know what it mean or where it came from." Here the old woman fumbled in the chamois leather bag and pulled out a flattish black stone, with a hole through the middle of it. "Here, take it," she said, pressing it into my hand, "take it. No harm nebber came from anything good. Keep it safe—nebber lose it!" and with a warning gesture the old crone hobbled away in the same cautious way as she had come, looking from side to side to see if we had been observed.

I was more amused than impressed by the old woman's earnestness, and was only prevented from laughing during her oration by the fear of hurting her feelings. When she was gone I took a good look at the stone which she had given me. It was intensely black, of extreme hardness, and oval in shape—just such a flat stone as one would pick up on the seashore if one wished to throw a long way. It was about three inches long, and an inch and a half broad at the middle, but rounded off at the extremities. The most curious part about it were several well-marked ridges which ran in semicircles over its surface, and gave it exactly the appearance of a human ear.

As my wound had nearly healed by this time, I took my leave of Mr. Murray shortly afterwards. The Union armies were everywhere victorious and converging on Richmond, so that my assistance seemed unnecessary, and I returned to Brooklyn. There I resumed my practice, and married the second daughter of Josiah Vanburger, the well-known wood engraver. In the course of a few years I built up a good connection and acquired considerable reputation in the treatment of pulmonary complaints. I still kept the old black stone in my pocket, and frequently told the story of the dramatic way in which I had become possessed of it.

"Rushing out of his cabin with a smoking pistol in his hand, he met me face to face."

The next seven or eight years of my life were quiet and uneventful. Summer followed Spring and Spring followed Winter, without any variation in my duties. As the practice increased I admitted J. S. Jackson as partner, he to have one-fourth of the profits. The continued strain had told upon my constitution, however, and I became at last so unwell that my wife insisted upon my consulting Dr. Kavanagh Smith, who was my colleague at the Samaritan Hospital. That gentleman examined me, and pronounced the apex of my left lung to be in a state of consolidation, recommending me at the same time to go through a course of medical treatment and to take a long sea voyage.

My own disposition, which is naturally restless, predisposed me strongly in favor of the latter piece of advice, and the matter was clinched by my meeting young Russell, of the firm of White, Russell & White, who offered me a passage in one of his father's ships, the Marie Celeste, which was just starting from Boston. "She is a snug little ship," he said, "and Tibbs, the captain, is an excellent fellow. There is nothing like a sailing ship for an invalid." I was very much of the same opinion myself, so I closed with the offer on the spot.

I arrived in Boston on October 12, 1873, and proceeded immediately to the office of the firm in order to thank them for their courtesy. As I was sitting in the counting-house waiting until they should be at liberty to see me, the words Marie Celeste suddenly attracted my attention. I looked round and saw a very tall, gaunt man, who was leaning across the polished mahogany counter asking some questions of the clerk at the other side. His face was turned half towards me, and I could see that he had a strong dash of negro blood in him, being probably a quadroon or even nearer akin to the black. His curved aquiline nose and straight lank hair showed the white strain, but the dark restless eye, sensuous mouth and gleaming teeth all told of his African origin. His complexion was of a sickly unhealthy yellow, and as his face was deeply pitted with smallpox, the general impression was so unfavorable as to be almost revolting. When he spoke, however, it was in a soft, melodious voice, and in well chosen words, and he was evidently a man of some education.

"I wished to ask a few questions about the Marie Celeste," he repeated, leaning across to the clerk. "She sails the day after to-morrow, does she not?"

"Yes, sir," said the young clerk, awed into unusual politeness by the glimmer of a large diamond in the stranger's shirt front.

"Where is she bound for?"

"Lisbon."

"How many of a crew?"

"Seven, sir."

"Passengers?"

"Yes, two. One of our young gentlemen, and a doctor from New York."

"No gentleman from the South?" asked the stranger, eagerly.

"No, none, sir."

"Is there room for another passenger?"

"Accommodation for three more," answered the clerk.

"I'll go," said the quadroon decisively. "I'll go. I'll engage my passage at once. Put it down, will you—Mr. Septimus Goring, of New Orleans."

The clerk filled up a form and handed it over to the stranger, pointing to a blank space at the bottom. As Mr. Goring stooped over to sign it I was horrified to observe that the fingers of his right hand had been lopped off, and that he was holding the pen between his thumb and palm. I have seen thousands slain in battle and assisted at every conceivable surgical operation, but I cannot recall any sight which gave me such a thrill of disgust as that great brown sponge-like hand with the single member protruding from it. He used it skilfully enough, however, for dashing off his signature, he nodded to the clerk and strolled out of the office just as Mr. White sent out word that he was ready to receive me.

I went down to the Marie Celeste that evening, and looked over my berth, which was extremely comfortable considering the small size of the vessel. Mr. Goring, whom I had seen in the morning, was to have the one next mine. Opposite was the captain's cabin and a small berth for Mr. John Harton, a gentleman who was going out in the interests of the firm.

October 16.—Cast off our warps at half-past two and were towed out into the bay, where the tug left us, and with all sail set we bowled along at about nine knots an hour. I stood upon the poop watching the low land of America sinking gradually upon the horizon until the evening haze hid it from my sight. A single red light, however, continued to blaze balefully behind us, throwing a long track like a trail of blood upon the water, and it is still visible as I write, though reduced to a mere speck. The Captain is in a bad humor, for two of his hands disappointed him at the last moment, and he was compelled to ship a couple of negroes who happened to be on the quay. The missing men were steady, reliable fellows, who had been with him several voyages, and their non-appearance puzzled as well as irritated him. Where a crew of seven men have to work a fair sized ship the loss of two experienced seamen is a serious one, for though the negroes may take a spell at the wheel or swab the decks, they are of little or no use in rough weather. Our cook is also a black man, and Mr. Septimus Goring has a little darky servant, so that we are rather a piebald community. The accountant, John Harton, promises to be an acquisition, for he is a cheery, amusing young fellow. Strange how little wealth has to do with happiness!

October 17.—Mrs. Tibbs appeared upon deck for the first time this morning—a cheerful, energetic woman, with a dear little child just able to walk and prattle. Young Harton pounced on it at once, and carried it away to his cabin, where no doubt he will lay the seeds of future dyspepsia in the child's stomach. Thus medicine doth make cynics of us all! The weather is still all that could be desired, with a fine fresh breeze from the west-sou'-west. The vessel goes so steadily that you would hardly know that she was moving were it not for the creaking of the cordage, the bellying of the sails, and the long white furrow in our wake. Walked the quarter-deck all morning with the Captain, and I think the keen fresh air has already done my breathing good, for the exercise did not fatigue me in any way. Tibbs is a remarkably intelligent man, and we had an interesting argument about Maury's observations on ocean currents, which we terminated by going down into his cabin to consult the original work. There we found Goring, rather to the Captain's surprise, as it is not usual for passengers to enter that sanctum unless specially invited. He apologized for his intrusion, however, pleading his ignorance of the usages of shiplife, and the good-natured sailor simply laughed at the incident, begging him to remain and favor us with his company. Goring pointed to the chronometers, the case of which he had opened, and remarked that he had been admiring them. He has evidently some practical knowledge of mathematical instruments, as he told at a glance which was the most trustworthy of the three, and also named their price within a few dollars. He had a discussion with the Captain, too, upon the variation of the compass, and when we came back to the ocean currents he showed a thorough grasp of the subject. Altogether, he rather improves upon acquaintance, and is a man of decided culture and refinement. His voice harmonizes with his conversation, and both are the very antithesis of his face and figure.

October 18.—The gloomy prognostications of last night were not fulfilled, as the wind died away again and we are lying now in a long, greasy swell, ruffled here and there by a fleeting catspaw which is insufficient to fill the sails. The air is colder than it was yesterday, and I have put on one of the thick woollen jerseys which my wife knitted for me. Harton came into my cabin in the morning, and we had a cigar together. He says that he remembers having seen Goring in Cleveland, Ohio, in '69. He was, it appears, a mystery then as now, wandering about without any visible employment, and extremely reticent on his own affairs. The man interests me as a psychological study. At breakfast this morning I suddenly had that vague feeling of uneasiness which comes over some people when closely stared at, and, looking quickly up, I met his eyes bent upon me with an intensity which amounted to ferocity, though their expression instantly softened as he made some conventional remark upon the weather. Curiously enough, Harton says that he had a very similar experience yesterday upon deck. I observe that Goring frequently talks to the colored seamen as he strolls about—a trait which I rather admire, as it is common to find half-breeds ignore their dark strain and treat their black kinsfolk with greater intolerance than a white man would do. His little page is devoted to him, apparently, which speaks well for his treatment of him. Altogether, the man is a curious mixture of incongruos qualities, and unless I am deceived in him will give me food for observation during the voyage.

The Captain is grumbling about his chronometers, which do not register exactly the same time. He says that it is the first time that they have ever disagreed. We were unable to get a noonday observation on account of the haze.

October 19.—Wind was cold, so I prudently remained in my cabin all day, only creeping out for dinner.

October 20 and 21.—Still cold, with a continual drizzle of rain, and I have not been able to leave the cabin. This confinement makes me feel weak and depressed. Goring came in to see me, but his company did not tend to cheer me up much, as he hardly uttered a word, but contented himself with staring at me in a peculiar and rather irritating manner. He then got up and stole out of the cabin without saying anything. I am beginning to suspect that the man is a lunatic. I think I mentioned that his cabin is next to mine. The two are simply divided by a thin wooden partition which is cracked in many places, some of the cracks being so large that I can hardly avoid, as I lie in my bunk, observing his motions in the adjoining room. Without any wish to play the spy, I see him continually stooping over what appears to be a chart and working with a pencil and compasses. I have remarked the interest he displays in matters connected with navigation, but I am surprised that he should take the trouble to work out the course of the ship. However, it is a harmless amusement enough, and no doubt he verifies his results by those oof the Captain.

I wish that the man did not run in my thoughts so much. I had a nightmare on the night of the 20th, in which I thought my bunk was a coffin, that I was laid out in it, and that Goring was endeavoring to nail up the lid, which I was frantically pushing away.

October 22.—A fine day, with hardly a cloud in the sky, and a fresh breeze from the sou'-west which wafts us gaily on our way. There has evidently been some heavy weather near us, as there is a tremendous swell, and the ship lurches until the end of the fore-yard nearly touches the water.

4.40 P. M.—While I was on deck this morning I heard a sudden explosion from the direction of my cabin, and, hurrying down, found that I had very nearly met with a serious accident. Goring was cleaning a revolver, it seems, in his cabin, when one of the barrels which he thought was unloaded went off. The ball had passed through the side partition and imbedded itself in the bulwarks in the exact place where my head usually rests. I have been under fire too often to magnify trifles, but there is no doubt that if I had been in the bunk it must have killed me. Goring, poor fellow, did not know that I had gone on deck that day, and must therefore have felt terribly frightened. I never saw such emotion in a man's face as when, on rushing out of his cabin with the smoking pistol in his hand, he met me face to face as I came down from the deck. Of course, he was profuse in his apologies, though I simply laughed at the incident.

11 P. M.—A misfortune has occurred so unexpected and so horrible that my little escape of the morning dwindles into insignificance. Mrs. Tibbs and her child have disappeared—utterly and entirely disappeared. I can hardly compose myself to write the sad details. About half-past 8 Tibbs rushed into my cabin with a very white face and asked me if I had seen his wife. I answered that I had not. He then ran wildly into the saloon and began groping about for any trace of her, while I followed him, endeavoring vainly to persuade him that his fears were ridiculous. We hunted over the ship for an hour and a half without coming on any sign of the missing woman or child. Poor Tibbs lost his voice completely from calling her name. Even the sailors, who are generally stolid enough, were deeply affected by the sight of him as he roamed bareheaded and dishevelled about the deck searching with feverish anxiety the most impossible places and returning to them again and again, with a piteous pertinacity. The last time she was seen was about 7 o'clock, when she took Doddy on to the poop to give him a breath of fresh air before putting him to bed. There was no one there at the time except the black seaman at the wheel, who denies having seen her at all. The whole affair is wrapped in mystery. My own theory is that while Mrs. Tibbs was holding the child and standing near the bulwarks it gave a spring and fell overboard, and that in her convulsive attempt to catch or save it, she followed it. I cannot account for the double disappearance in any other way.

October 23.—Woke with a vague feeling of heaviness and misfortune, but it was not until a few moments' reflection that I was able to recall our loss of the night before. When I came on deck I saw the poor skipper standing gazing back at the waste of waters behind us which contains everything dear to him upon earth. I attempted to speak to him, but he turned brusquely away and began pacing the deck with his head sunk upon his breast. Even now, when the truth is so clear, he cannot pass a boat or an unbent sail without peering under it. He looks ten years older than he did yesterday morning. Harton is terribly cut up, for he was fond of little Doddy, and Goring seems sorry, too. At least he has shut himself up in his cabin all day, and when I got a casual glance at him his head was resting on his two hands as if in a melancholy reverie.

October 24.—Is the ship accursed? Was there ever a voyage which began so fairly and which changed so disastrously? Tibbs shot himself through the head during the night. I was awakened about 3 o'clock in the morning by an explosion, and immediately sprang out of bed and rushed into the Captain's cabin to find out the cause, though with a terrible presentiment in my heart. Quickly as I went, Goring went more quickly still, for he was already in the cabin stooping over the dead body of the Captain. It was a hideous sight, for the whole front of his face was blown in, and the little room was swimming in blood. The pistol was lying beside him on the floor, just as it had dropped from his hand. He had evidently put it to his mouth before pulling the trigger. Goring and I picked him reverently up and laid him on his bed. The crew had all clustered into his cabin, and the six white men were deeply grieved, for they were old hands who had sailed with him many years. There were dark looks and murmurs among them, too, and one of them openly declared that the ship was haunted. Harton helped to lay the poor skipper out, and we did him up in canvas between us. At 12 o'clock the foreyard was hauled aback, and we committed his body to the deep.

October 2—Goring, Harton and I had a chat together on deck in the morning. Harton tried to draw Goring out as to his profession and his object in going to Europe, but the quadroon parried all his questions and gave us no information. Indeed, he seemed to be slightly offended by Harton's pertinacity, and went down into his cabin. I wonder why we should both take such an interest in this man! I suppose it is his striking appearance, coupled with his apparent wealth, which piques our curiosity. Harton has a theory that he is really a detective, that he is after some criminal who has got away to Portugal, and that he chooses this peculiar way of traveling that he may arrive unnoticed and pounce upon his quarry unawares. I think the supposition is rather a far-fetched one, but Harton bases it upon a book which Goring left on deck, and which he picked up and glanced over. It was a sort of scrap-book, it seems, and contained a large number of newspaper clippings. All these clippings related to murders which had been committed at various times in the States during the last twenty years or so. The curious thing which Harton observed about them, however, was that they were invariably murders the authors of which had never been brought to justice.

October 27, 28.—Wind still fair, and we are making good progress. Strange how easily a human unit may drop out of its place and be forgotten! Tibbs is hardly ever mentioned now. Hyson has taken possession of his cabin, and all goes on as before. Were it not for Mrs. Tibbs's sewing machine upon a side table we might forget that the unfortunate family had ever existed. Another accident occurred on board to-day, though fortunately not a very serious one. One of our white hands had gone down the afterhold to fetch up a spare coil of rope, when one of the hatches which he had removed came crashing down on top of him. He saved his life by springing out of the way, but one of his feet was terribly crushed, and he will be of little use for the remainder of the voyage.

October 31.—My weak lungs, combined with the exciting episodes of the voyage, have shaken my nervous system so much that the most trivial incident affects me. I can hardly believe that I am the same man who tied the external iliac artery, an operation requiring the nicest precision, under a heavy rifle fire at Antietam. I am as nervous as a child. I was lying half dozing last night about four bells in the middle watch trying in vain to drop into a refreshing sleep. There was no light inside my cabin, but a single ray of moonlight streamed in through the port-hole, throwing a silvery flickering circle upon the door. As I lay I kept my drowsy eyes upon this circle, and was conscious that it was gradually becoming less well-defined as my senses left me, when I was suddenly recalled to full wakefulness by the appearance of a small dark object in the very centre of the luminous disc. I lay quietly and breathlessly watching it. Gradually it grew larger and plainer, and then I perceived that it was a human hand which had been cautiously inserted through the chink of the half-closed door—a hand which, as I observed with a thrill of horror, was not provided with fingers. The door swung cautiously backward, and Goring's head followed his hand. It appeared in the centre of the moonlight, and was framed as it were in a ghastly uncertain halo, against which his features showed out plainly. It seemed to me that I had never seen such an utterly fiendish and merciless expression upon a human face. His eyes were dilated and glaring, his lips drawn back so as to show his white fangs, and his straight black hair appeared to bristle over his low forehead like the hood of a cobra. The sudden and noiseless apparition had such an effect upon me that I sprang up in bed trembling in every limb, and held out my hand toward my revolver. I was heartily ashamed of my hastiness when he explained the object of his intrusion, as he immediately did in the most courteous language. He had been suffering from toothache, poor fellow! and had come in to beg some laudanum, knowing that I possessed a medicine chest. As to a sinister expression, he is never a beauty, and what with my state of nervous tension and the effect of the shifting moonlight it was easy to conjure up something horrible. I gave him twenty drops, and he went off again with many expressions of gratitude.

November 7.—Harton and I sat on the poop all the morning, for the weather is becoming very warm as we come into the southern latitudes. We reckon that we have done two-thirds of our voyage. How glad we shall be to see the green banks of the Tagus and leave this unlucky ship forever! I was endeavoring to amuse Harton to-day and to while away the time by telling him some of the experiences of my past life. Among others I related to him how I came into the possession of my black stone, and as a finale I rummaged in the side pocket of my old shooting coat and produced the identical object in question. He and I were bending over it together,

I pointed out to him the curious ridges upon its surface, when we were conscious of a shadow falling between us and the sun, and looking round saw Goring standing behind us glaring over our shoulders at the stone. For some reason or other he appeared to be powerfully excited, though he was evidently trying to control his emotion. He pointed once or twice at my relic

ADVENTURES OF THE HUNTERS

A Thrilling Account of the Hunter Family Hunting a Summer Resort —in Ten Palpitating Chapters.

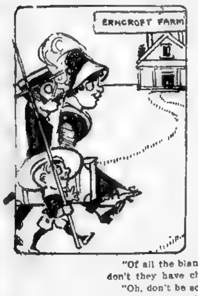
Mr. and Mrs. Hunter Down on the Farm.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

MRS. HUNTER goes to the mountains because her husband says he prefers the beach, but at the mountains the guests think her mountain climbing dress a Texas Tommy costume, so they go to the beach, near a smelly clam cannery. Hunter longs for an inland lake resort, and so with customary kindness his wife drags him away to a farm.

CHAPTER III.

"AT last," sighed Mrs. Hunter, in ecstacy, as she sank into a hammock beneath a great butternut tree, "at last we are here amid peace and quiet, amid Nature's own surroundings."



"Uh-huh," agreed her husband, lighting a cigar, looking about for a seat, and sitting on the grass beside her, "uh-huh, here we are at Ferncroft Farm, where the—what the"—and Hunter leaped to his feet and reached around behind him.

"John, you swore!"

"No, I didn't, but if you don't take that animal off me that's biting the heart out of me I will swear," and he squirmed about.

"Turn around, John—your heart must be in a funny place—were you sitting on it"—

"Of course I was sitting on it, whadje suppose I jumped up for?"

"I mean your heart. You'll have to give me your knife, it's a fish hook, and I'll have to cut it out of your trousers."

"Of all the blanked places to leave a fish hook Why don't they have chairs here or more hammocks?"

"Oh, don't be so peevish, John," and Mrs. Hunter lay back in the quaint old barrel-stave hammock. The moment she did this the hammock revolved; there was a thud, a scream, and Mrs. Hunter lay prone on the ground.

"Nice hammock—lovely Ferncroft Farm," commented Hunter.

"Never mind, we came here for perfect rest, dear; let's sit on this grassy little knoll and see the lovely sunset."

"And have another fish hook bite me?" but he sat down beside his wife.

"Isn't that sunset glorious?" asked Mrs Hunter.

"Just the same as we see from our dining room window in the city, except, of course, from our home we do not get the effect of that lovely pigpen there, nor the aroma from the er"——

"All right, be just as cross as you can about it. I came here for peace and comfort and rest and sleep, and I'm going to have it. Where's Willie?"

Before he could answer the hired man came around the corner bringing Willie with him. Willie was yelling lustily.

"We'll put a sort of fence around that well to-morrow," apologized the hired man. "Your boy here fell inter it. The milk was hangin' down in it to cool and he spilled the whole of it"

Willie was put to bed. Hunter and his wife came out to enjoy the fragrant evening. Night birds were calling, tree toads were shrilling their call, frogs were peeping and all nature seemed to be a-tune.

"Smell the honeysuckle," said Mrs. Hunter.

"Great," said Huntter, sniffling, "great"——he sniffed again, looked around, sniffed again.

"Honeysuckle? Say, that honeysuckle wears black fur with white stripes down its back"——

"My land!" gasped Mrs. Hunter, "What"——

Bang!

It was the report of a gun from the direction of the hen house; a small animal whisked around the corner.

"Almost got him, durn him," yelled the hired man, loping down the road with a shotgun.

The Hunters retired.

Next morning—that is, the sun wasn't up, but light streaks were showing in the east—Mr. and Mrs. Hunter turned restlessly and dimly wondered what was happening.

"Oh, please shut up," wailed Mrs. Hunter.

"Huh? Who, me? Keep still yourself!" grumbled Hunter.

Mrs. Hunter became wide awake and arose to one elbow "If you think you can palm that snoring off on me, John Hunter"—— she began.

Well, I wasn't snoring"

"You were, you woke me up, you"——

Hunter got up and looked out the window.

"Awr, fiddle," he said, "the hired man's sawing wood for breakfast. Might have expected it. That stuff I had for dinner was about as juicy as a pine board."

The Hunters tried to sleep, but after the wood sawing came the grinding of scythes on the old squeaky grindstone It sounded like a hot journal on a freight car. Then the cows were let out and the cowbell jangled, then they harnessed the horse with many "Whoas!" "Backup, durn yes!" and "Giddaps."

Just as they got to sleep the breakfast bell jangled. It was 6 30

"Never mind, John, we will wander out in the beautiful country and pick flowers and rest; we will hear the birds and be carefree and happy," declared Mrs. Hunter.

"Where's Willie?" asked Hunter.

"Oh, playing around, the little dear," replied his wife. "Weren't those lovely beans and peas and things we had for breakfast?"

"Didn't notice"——

"That's it, be cross, when you know they were perfectly fresh, came right out of that garden there."

Just then there was a terrible din. Willie came prancing around the corner of the woodshed, shouting "Cho-choo-choo! I'm a train o' cars!" and he had about seventy-five tin cans strung on a long string, dragging them after him.

Hunter reached out and grabbed him. "Let's see your cars, Willie," he said, grinning. "Ah, yes, I see, special cars, all nicely named. Here's 'Emerald Peas,' and there's 'Golden Corn,' and this is 'Sunset Tomatoes,' 'Asparagus Tips,' 'Nugget Squash' and—look here, son, some of these cans haven't been opened long; where did you get them?"

Willie led his fond parents around the corner of the woodshed, where they beheld a pile of empty tin cans about ten feet high

"'Ferncroft Farm,'" said Hunter, quoting from the advertisement he took from his pocket, "'is noted for its strictly fresh vegetables'"——

"Never mind, John, it's peaceful here. Come and pick wild flowers with me," urged his wife.

"Nix, you'd pick dogwood or some such poison"——

"Bosh, you are always trying to make things dismal. I'm going for some flowers; come Willie," and away they went Hunter lighted a cigar, went over by the stone wall in the shade and lay down among some cool, green vines, where he was soon making up for his lost sleep

An hour later he heard a great commotion, and, sitting up, beheld his wife, holding her handkerchief to her face and weeping hysterically

'A big yellow bee bit Ma right on the end of her nose'" shrieked Willie, prancing around in glee. "Gee you oughter to see it, it's bigger'n a balloon"

"I told you not to pick wild flowers. I said you'd get poisoned or something" Hunter began sternly, when the hired man approached to learn the trouble.

"Hey, mister," he yelled to Hunter, "better git outer them vines, that's pizen ivy!"

A week later, when Mrs. Hunter's nose had got back to its original shape and she could see out of both eyes and Hunter had got the bandages off his neck and arms, they packed up and left fair Ferncroft Farm for beautiful Lake Winniemegenniss.

CORBETT—Tom, what are you all so puffed up about this evening?

LEWIS—Well, you see it's like this. A very dear friend of mine invited me to visit and inspect his brewery today. Strangely enough, I have no lpskalorious antagonism toward breweries, so I dried myself out thoroughly and informed him that I would obey the subpoena.

CORBETT—And did you enjoy your tour of inspection through the brewery?

LEWIS—Oh, yes, I got along swimmingly, although I can't swim. Whilst looking over a big beer vat on the ground floor, I lost my balance and fell in. I was nearly drowned in what made Milwaukee famous, for, as I said above, I can't swim, and so I had to drink myself out. Speaking of beer, the Dutchman my sister married keeps a larger beer saloon——

CORBETT—You mean a lager beer saloon, Tom.

LEWIS—Why didn't you let me finish? I meant, as I was going to assert, that you can get a larger beer than any place in town.

CORBETT—I should think he would get into a fight with his competitors for that.

LEWIS—He would, but he can lick 'em all, so you see they don't bother him. You used to fight when you were young, didn't you, Mr. Corbett?

CORBETT—I was in the ring until a few years ago, Tom.

LEWIS—I also was a terrible scrapper in my day. They used to call me the Awful Avenger. Why, I walked twenty miles to lick a fellow once.

CORBETT—I hope you avenged your cause, Tom. Did you walk back?

LEWIS—Not quite. They carried me back.

CORBETT—It's a good thing you had a loving wife to restore you to normal conditions. By the way, how's your little boy Johnny now?

LEWIS—He's always happy when he's with me, but his mother drives him nearly crazy pounding manners into him all the time. All he hears from sunup to sunset is manners, and whenever he has a nightmare he yells that the manners are sticking knives and forks into him. His mother said to him, "Johnny, whenever you ask for anything always say 'if you please.'" The other day the minister came to bum a meal on us, and Johnny said, "Mom, gimme some butter." His mother said, "If what?" Johnny said, "If you can reach it."

CORBETT—I'll grant you a reprieve on that, Tom. Lew, you've been silently fidgeting for the last few minutes. Did you have a question to propound?

DOCKSTADER—Yes; why—why—does Henry Miller wear a white [illegible]

CORBETT—Oh, come on, now; what's the matter? Has somebody turned the reverse lever on you? Why, I thought you had a joke—I really dared to hope that you wanted to attract my attention to listen to something worth while. Why, the idea, the idea of an old man like you, who has been stealing money for the last sixty years as a minstrel——

DOCKSTADER—Well, I don't see that you've answered the question.

CORBETT—Don't interrupt me, you old fossil. Why, the nerve of you, trying to pull a prehistoric mossback like that on me! Why, that joke's actually older than you are. Huh! If somebody asked you "Why does a chicken cross the road?" you'd fall off your chair.

DOCKSTADER—Mind what you say there, now, Mr. Corbett. You know I got a rep'tation, I have. I suppose you think you've got a rep'tation, too, now, don't you?

CORBETT—Well, I did have one, and I'm mighty proud of it. For five years I was supreme in the fistic world.

DOCKSTADER—Yes. Huh! You whipped Sullivan, didn't you? Huh! And you ought to have gone to the workhouse for it. Poor old man, poor old John L.—came into the ring with his hair dyed, had locomotor ataxia, corns on his arms—and that ain't all; he was stewed when he started at you; even then he nearly put you to sleep. Shame on you, James.

PROSPECT PARK.

PROSPECT PARK was made so that lovers in Brooklyn would have a place to hang out—or rather hang on—without being run over by a trolley car or baby carriage.

Prospect Park does not lie near the heart of the city. It is located nearer the lights. It is composed of a lake (which, served with sufficient lumps of sugar, would prove a good substitute for coffee), a near-menagerie, an almost grand bandstand, two policemen and a myriad of bugs.

The lake is wet in spots, and the fish have to go over to the fountain at night to wash themselves. There is a flock of rowboats on the water every Sunday. You hear a long-bearded veteran remark about his son at the oars: "Here ve pay feefty cents the hour, und he ain'd got haf his oars vet; it's a shame." There are altogether too many boats on the lake. Even the fish are complaining. The lake is so crowded that a fellow finds himself frequently hugging the girl in the next boat instead of the one by his side.

The menagerie is a circus. It contains many wild animals, such as rabbits, guinea pigs, sheep, etc. We don't know what kind of an animal an "etc." is, but if it is something shaggy and untidy-looking, it is in the Prospect Park Zoo. The animals in the cages have been changed often, but not the signs on the cages, so that one frequently sees an antelope with a hump on its back and a hyena with a pair of beautiful horns and a goatee. This badly shatters the small boy's faith in the pictures in his school zoology

It beats the band the way the Brooklynites crowd around the music. A band stand has been erected so that the multitude can readily see who is to blame for the disturbance. Selections from Liszt go hand-in-hand with "Everybody's Doing It."

One spot in the park is set aside as a storage place for statues of German composers. Originally the Teutons told the park authorities they would put full size statues in the park or bust. Busts were agreed upon.

BOTANY

BOTANY was invented so that farmers and florists would have some sort of a high-toned name for their profession.

Botany is the study of all kinds of plants, excepting ice, steel and manufacturing plants. I do not know very much about them, never having botany. We do know, however, that tomato plants bear tomatoes, and egg plants bear eggs, and rubber plants bear rubber, although we never saw a bare rubber; it is always the rubbee who is bare, Turkishbathingly speaking.

Aristotle was the first one to monkey with plants. He planted his foot on soil belonging to Theophrastus, and when Theo tried to soil Aristo's foot with the shank end of a spade, Ari planted his fist into Theo's Roman nose and made it roam more than ever. That was the first plant of which scientific history informs us.

To take the word botany apart in order to find its derivative ancestors would require a genealogical expert. "Bot," of course, is just half a bottle, and "any" means anyone, so that telescoping the syllables we can interpret its meaning to be that if anyone plants a half bottle into himself, he will see an assemblage of variegated plants that will resemble wall paper patterns.

There are many fields of botanical activity. Pathology, for instance, deals with diseases of plants, so that when a bunch of American Beauty roses have a nettle rash the patho can tell immediately whether it was contracted by lying on its own thorns or whether it burst its sides laughing at the chump who paid one dollar apiece for them. A paleobotanist has to do with fossils; forestry with forests; basteriologist with backs, maybe. The mycologist studies fungi. Fungi are scrumptious. Of course there is nothing nice about the spelling, for it seems as if the fellow who wrote it was called away before he had time to spell it out. But the scent of the fungi is exhilarating, resembling somewhat the booshwa.

BOSTON.

BOSTON was started so that there would be some place to keep beans. Its principal export is beans. Its chief imports are beans. Almost every prominent family has its connoisseur of beans, but, of course, some of them are has-beans. The natives are all fond of beans. They are brown—the beans, not the natives—and wear spectacles—the natives, not the beans

Boston is surrounded by Massachusetts and is composed of lowlands and highbrows. Every child in Boston can recite the contents of the dictionary by heart, and wouldn't split infinitives any more than they would split cordwood.

In Boston a child born with a pair of silver spectacles on its nose is thought more of than a child coming into the world with a spoon in its mouth made of the same metal. Wearing eyeglasses is quite a spectacle, as everybody nose.

When the chests were thrown into the water at Boston Harbor it suited the colonists to a tea, and one sailor took coffee's hat and dared any one to touch a hair on his cocoa for what he had done.

A part of Boston is Common. Faneuil Hall is the Cradle of Liberty and at one time was rocked by the British; some of the stones can still be seen in the revolutionary cemeteries.

Careless

TWO of the track runners passed a learned and preoccupied professor showing a young lady visitor through the college grounds.

With a dainty shiver the girl remarked:

"It's dreadfully cold—isn't it?—to be without stockings."

The professor's mind turned for a moment from contemplation of the fourth dimension.

"Then why did you leave them off?" he asked.

What Is a Gentleman?

THE teacher of the first grade in one of the Philadelphia public schools gave the small boys a lesson on "Being a Gentleman" the other day. To begin with she asked how many of them knew what is meant to be a gentleman. Thus spoke the owners of the hands that were raised:

"Git to work and buy girls sumthin'."

"Not to hit ladies."

"When you go in the street, don't bump into the ladies."

"If a lady drops anything pick it up for her"—in quick afterthought, "and don't keep it."

"Buy 'um clothes en be nice to 'um."

"Stay on the gutter side, so if anybody comes back of them and the lady's pocketbook is open, they can't steal anything."

"A gentleman is one what always stays on the outside of a lady."

"Help wash de clothes"—from an embroyo gentleman of color.

"Help them to wash the dishes," said he of a domestic turn.

The Sins of Sodom and Gomorrah

JOHN DREW, the actor, was moved to talk about the Bible at a society dinner one evening. On his way to the club with a friend later on, he said:

"Nobody reads the Bible any more. The ignorance of the average person about the Bible and biblical things is absolutely amazing. After I had talked my head off regarding the Scriptures this evening, a young lady said:

"'I have enjoyed what you said. But, do you know, I always thought Sodom and Gomorrah were man and wife?"

"An older woman made this comment:

"'Well, they ought to have been if they were not.'"

Righteous Indignation

LITTLE RUTH was the youngest daughter in a very strict Presbyterian family that especially abhorred profanity.

One day little Ruth became exceedingly exasperated with one of her dollies. In her baby vocabulary she could find no words to express adequately her disapproval of dolly's conduct.

Finally, throwing the offending dolly across the room, she cried feelingly:

"My gracious! I wish I belonged to a family that sweared!"

Cheer Up, Willie!

TEACHER (to a roomful of pupils)—And just think! one of you may be President some day. All of you who would like to be President, please rise.

All rose except Willie.

"Well, Willie, what's the matter? Wouldn't you like to be President?"

"Y-yes'm," stammered Willie, "b-but I ca-ca-can't."

"Why not?" asked teacher, astonished.

"Because—because I'm a D-d-democrat," said Willie, bursting into tears.

To Banish Health Destroying Noises from Our Cities

What the Otological Congress at Harvard Medical College Expects to Do in Eliminating the Nerve Racking, Disease Causing Tumult of the American Municipalities.

By Dr. Britton D. Evans

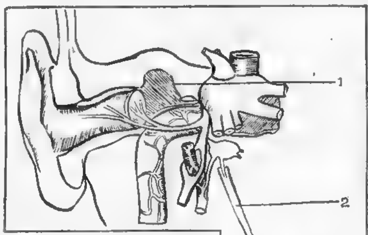
Ghiberti's Bas Relief of the Falling of the Walls of Jericho. Dr. Evans Suggests That the Biblical Legend Has a Basis in Fact and That Noise Made by the Israelites So Wore Out the Nerves of the Jericho People That They Surrendered the City.



A Diagram Illustrating How Noise Can Really "Set Your Teeth on Edge" and Make Them Ache.

1.—Termination of Nerve Conveying Noise Through the Ear to the Brain.

Dr. Britton D. Evans, the Distinguished American Alienist.

IN August five hundred distinguished physicians and scientists from all parts of Europe and America will meet at the Harvard Medical School in Boston to devise ways and means to decrease, or possibly eliminate, the ever increasing noises of the modern city. Technically speaking, this will be the annual International Otological Congress. Otology is the science of the ear.

The Congress will be in session from the [illegible] of August. All diseases of the ear and nerves will be discussed, lectures will be given by the most famous specialists of the world, but above all preventive measures will be strongly advocated, for in the treatment of deafness and nervous diseases even more than in others, an ounce of prevention is of more value than a pound of cure. One of the sessions of the Congress will be devoted exclusively to the discussion of the effect of noise on the ear, the nervous system and on the physical condition generally. This meeting will be open to the public, for public opinion must be educated before any great good can be accomplished.

Mechanical experts, men at the head of the great transportation companies, elevated railroad companies, foundries, factories, and all the manifold activities of the great cities, it is hoped, will appear before this Congress. The elimination of noise is a scientific problem. Specialists in the diseases of the ear, throat, eye and nerves can decry noise and lecture on its dangers, plead for quiet, but noise in communities can only be controlled by legal measures and eliminated through scientific invention. It is one thing to say let there be quiet; it is another thing to have it.

Ear and nerve specialists of the United States have become so keenly alive to the danger done the human system by the pandemonium of the modern city that some relief may be hoped for in the near future.

America is becoming a nation of neurasthenics and America is the noisiest nation on earth. It is not so much the amount of work that the American does that sends hundreds annually into sanatoriums and as many thousands into insane asylums. The conditions under which these men work and live are responsible for their breakdowns.

America the Land of Noise.

The great cities of Europe and England are comparatively quiet. In Belgium screeching locomotive whistles have been softened, in England such noises have been eliminated. The American, living and working in our modern cities, is never free from noise, although in many New England cities engine whistling has been stopped by legal measures. And the Superior Court of Massachusetts has allowed damages for noises caused by the elevated railroad. Sleeping and waking he is surrounded by noise-making modern inventions. The millionaire, or well-to-do business man, living in exclusive residential streets where car lines are forbidden, finds his nights made hideous by the tooting of motor horns, and the nerve racking cut-out. It has been recently proved most positively that the noise of the cut-out is entirely unnecessary. In many cities its use is illegal, New York is just now enforcing a cut-out law. This is one step forward in the development of the noiseless city.

No man can live without eating, drinking and sleeping. Food never takes the place of sleep without injuring the nervous system, but sleep can at times take the place of food without doing any vital harm to the human system. The damage done the nervous system, through the loss of nature's sweet restorer can scarcely be computed. Every time a man's sleep is disturbed his nervous system receives a shock. Cat's yowling in the backyard, a sharp noise of any kind wakes him up, perhaps not to sleep again all night. He may not be conscious of any shock, but he is cross and irritable all the next day. He becomes a victim of nervous dyspepsia. After many of these unconscious shocks he seeks a nerve specialist and perhaps ends his days in a sanatorium.

All men are not consciously affected by the same noises. If all men were affected by the same noises, only those noises would have to be eliminated. It is, therefore, necessary that practically all noises be put under the ban.

Just what is noise? As defined in the Standard Dictionary it has several meanings. It may be, First, a sound of any kind, but especially of a confused or disagreeable kind; a din. Second, in acoustics, a noise is used to describe a confused sound obtained by the discordant mingling of a number of distinct vibrations. J. D. Steele in his book on physics writes that the difference between noise and music is that between irregular and regular vibrations.

Noise may be divided into three parts, as was ancient Gaul, according to Caesar's Commentaries, First, noise that is pleasant. Second, noise that we are accustomed to; and Third, those noises that are disagreeable.

A noise which is unpleasant to one person or race, may be considered the grandest music by others. Probably the music of ancient times, such as beating on sheep skins and clashing cymbals, would now be considered only a disharmonious jangle of discordant notes. Such noises were detrimental only as they disturb sleep. They did not of themselves injure the nerves of ear, eye or body.

It is a well-known fact and a matter of authentic record that these men of genius were actually averse to music, looked upon it as noise, were disagreeably affected by it and could not work under its spell: Edmund Burke, Byron, Charles Fox, Hume, Dr. Johnson, Daniel O'Connell, Robert Peel and William Pitt. The poet Rogers felt actual discomfort at the sounds of music. Sir Walter Scott, Southey and Tennyson were irritated beyond degree at the sound of the most delightful music, Tennyson was a nervous dyspeptic. The ancients also must have complained of noise. Pompeii had its problenms, and the suppression of street noises was made a political issue nineteen hundred years ago. Political issues set up at that time have recently been unearthed. These posters showed that the principal platfrom of certain candidates was the oppression of such noises.

In many occupations a certain amount of noise is a necessary accompaniment. To those accustomed to this noise, even if it does not become absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of their work, it gives them a feeling that everything is going smoothly. It has a soothing effect upon them, just as perfect quietude has upon persons accustomed to working under quiet conditions. If everything is going along properly where noise is the accompaniment of the surroundings, those accustomed to it are able to sleep peacefully, but the least stoppage of the machinery, or change in sound, is to them a discordant note. This condition has, however, a most serious effect, in time, on the whole human system. I have had under my care the mother of nine children who never could sleep when the children were quiet, but could sleep peacefully during their noisiest play.

People who live in a large city suffer greatly from excessive noise, due to surface and elevated railways, and often to the driving of heavy milk wagons over stone pavements. There are alas, not yet many places where the making of noise is forbidden as it was when the wooden pavement said to the omnibus, "You can't make any noise here."

Along with these noises are those of factories, hurdy-gurdies and frequently hawkers, and in many places steam whistles either from factories or boats, together with the ringing of innumerable church bells, which, while alone they may be sweet music, when combined produce nothing but a jangling sound. If these people visit the country they will complain for some time, especially at night, of the lack of ability to acquire sufficient peaceful slumber and repose due to the quiet surroundings.

A great deal of noise is made about the time we celebrate our Independence Day. Noise has apparently been considered to show a large amount of patriotism. The reckless firing of a revolvers, and discharging firecrackers are unworthy of a civilized nation. That we are outgrowinging this barbaric state is shown by the increasing number of safe and sane Fourths throughout the country.

Noise has a [illegible] frequently in persons supposed to be strong. They may have an unknown weakness of the heart or nerves, perhaps a hereditary weakness. Living a normal, quiet life, they are unconscious of their condition. A sudden shock, produced by unexpected noise has many times proved fatal. Hysterical women have become hopelessly insane at some sudden noise. Our old-time Independence Day celebration, when our patriotism was denoted by the amount of noise we could make, was responsible [illegible] deafness and many [illegible] insanity.

Noise [illegible] on other special organs [illegible] as well as on the [illegible] Dr. [illegible] a nose and throat [illegible] regarding the [illegible] discovered that it had [illegible] effect on the throat [illegible] and that after [illegible] have [illegible] witnessed [illegible] many return [illegible] attention. Why [illegible] otherwise than [illegible] after a session of protracted [illegible]? Because their nerves are [illegible] their heads are bursting [illegible] their brains are practically [illegible]. They vote for the man boisterously suggested because their brains [illegible] to conduct sane actions. No [illegible] psychological effects on the [illegible], politicians understand this, and [illegible] at our political conventions the candidate whose supporters make the most noise gets the [illegible]. Hence the so called stampede.

The fall of the ancient city of Jericho may have resulted from the peculiar psychological effect of continued noise on the nerves of the wicked inhabitants. Joshua was told to compass the city for seven days and [illegible] to carry on a campaign of noise. For six days the priests marched around the walls of the besieged city blowing their horns forcefully and steadily. On the seventh day, while the priests compassed the city seven times blowing their trumpets all the children of Israel shouted "with a great shout" and "the wall of the city fell down flat." Students who do not favor the miracle theory say that the noise vibrations caused the walls to [illegible]. The invaders entered it, and the wicked people of Jericho, worn out from their excesses and dissipations and by the continued noises of the trumpets, fell easily before the onslaught.

The quiet thinker is the strong thinker. The quiet nation is the strong nation. The strength of a nation is in its people, the strength of a people is in its nerves. The province of good government lies largely in the protection of the weak. When American cities enforce the enactment of laws against noise-makers the Americans [illegible] the strongest on earth, rather than the noisiest.

The greatest injustice is done to the children of the nation when they are forced to live in noise.

The children of to-day are the parents of the future, the nervous high-strung modern child will have, in time, even more nervous, high-strung children, until a half insane race is the result.

It is only strong parents that bear strong children.

It is well known to all physicians that a nerve-diseased parent will have nerve-diseased, perhaps imbecile offspring. Again strong parents will make their children nervous wrecks by injudicious bringing up.

Destroying Children's Nerves.

Dr. Luther Emmett Holt, Carpenter Professor of Pediatrics in Columbia University, says that functional nervous diseases are steadily increasing in young children and says that most of it is due to playing boisterously with them, "stimulating to laughter and exciting them with sights, sounds or merriments until they shake with apparent delight."

Everybody knows that for sick people, quiet and peaceful surroundings are advisable. When a prominent and influential person becomes ill any noises that will likely disturb him are discontinued if possible. The streets are often strewn with straw, the ringing of bells in the neighborhood is frequently prohibited and traffic is diverted. These quieting efforts are equally beneficial for other sick persons. The reasons for this are that peaceful sleep and rest allow the body to recuperate. If this is desirable for those who are sick, it is equally desirable to keep the nervous system of those who are well in as near a normal and vigorous condition as possible.

The deeper the nerve specialists go into the study of noise and its alarming effect on the human system, the more necessary they deem the noiseless city.

The otologists originally desiring the elimination of noise for the ear's sake are going farther each day. They early realized that most modern inventions are noise producers. Machines of all kinds are noise makers. Many of the toys and the games provided for the modern child are noise producers. The modern street cars with their flat wheels, their gongs, their careless handlers, are fruitful noise makers, and in cities these cars run all night. Laws against flat wheels are seldom enforced. We must have street traffic. It is almost an impossibility to have surface and elevated cars run without noise. Therefore, the noiseless city will have its transportation lines run under the ground. Science can find a way to deaden the underground noise. In the Boston Subway, for instance, there is comparatively little noise.

Noiseless pavements are within the reach of all cities and towns. Cobble stones must go. With noiseless pavements and rubber tired vehicles, much of the modern noise will be eliminated.

Doctor Clarence J. Blake, of Boston, chief aurist of Harvard Medical School, is president of the committee having the the noiseless city in view. Doctor Vittorio Grazzi, of the Pisa University, is the pioneer in the International movement for the suppression of noise. Doctor Grazzi lives in a nearly noiseless city, Pisa, but he only too keenly realizes the dangers to humanity from unnecessary noises elsewhere.

Citizens of the modern American city where all large buildings are of steel construction, have resigned themselves to the idea that where there is building there must be noise. But scientists to-day are discovering that the infernal steam riveter may be muffled just as readily as is the exhaust of a motor boat. If the production of noise is made a crime, necessity will soon be the mother of invention.

The eyes are affected by noise to a limited degree, just as all organs are affected by nervous shock. The ear, unlike most other organs, has no physical protection. We can close our eyes to unpleasant sights, but our ears are always open. Undoubtedly the men who evolve from the modern Bedlam the City of Quiet will be ranked among the greatest benefactors of the race.

HOW THE WORLD IS GROWING BETTER--

SYMPATHY.

IS the way hard and thorny, oh, my brother?
  Do tempests beat, and adverse wild winds blow?
And are you spent, and broken at each nightfall?
  Yet with each morn you rise and onward go?
Brother, I know, I know!
I, too, have journeyed so.

Is your heart mad with longing, oh, my sister?
  Are all great passions in your breast aglow?
Does the white wonder of your own soul blind you,
  And are you torn with rapture and with woe?
Sister, I know, I know!
I, too, have suffered so.

Is the road filled with snare and quicksand, pilgrim?
  Do pitfalls lie where roses seem to grow?
And have you sometimes stumbled in the darkness,
  And are you bruised and scarred by many a blow?
Pilgrim, I know, I know!
I, too, have stumbled so.

Do you send out rebellious cry and question,
  As mocking hours pass silently and slow;
Does your insistent "wherefore" bring no answer,
  While stars wax pale with watching, and drop low?
I, too, have questioned so,
But now I KNOW, I KNOW!
To toil, to strive, to err, to cry, to grow,
TO LOVE THROUGH ALL—this is the way to KNOW.

"WHY do people in comfortable circumstances and people of wealth," asks a reader, "have so little sympathy with the struggling masses?" The question suggests a condition which does not exist.

There was never so much practical sympathy in the world, in any previous era, as we find in the hearts and works of humanity to-day.

We cannot judge the world by a few selfish and indolent beings who are satisfied to eat, drink, wear new clothes and ride in motor cars, giving no thought to others who are deprived of the comforts of life. Such people amount to little in the scheme of the universe. They are like the pests of flies and mosquitoes and other insects which render us uncomfortable. They will be eliminated in time by the wise and sensible methods of altruistic science.

There are tens of thousands, and still thousands more, unselfish men and women working continually to think of ways and means to improve the condition of toiling, striving humanity.

There has always been poverty in the world. It will exist until the mother earth is turned over to the use of all her children. But in the days which many unthinking people call the "Good Old Times" there was ten-fold the cruelty, selfishness and indifference to the suffering of the poor which exists now. A hundred years ago men were thrown into prison for debt—and prisons were infernos. No societies existed then for improving prison conditions. No one dreamed of organizing an association to aid ex prisoners.

The Salvation Army was not formed. Science had not made its way toward discoveries which mean better surroundings and better food and better habits for the race.

Children worked in the mines in England fourteen hours a day, and there was no humane society to step forward and forbid it. It was the prevailing belief in that time that parents had the right to work their children like slaves if they chose to do so, or to beat them unmercifully and starve them as a punishment for disobedience, and a man might kill his horse or dog with cruelty and there was no law to prevent or punish.

In one century tremendous strides have been made by the whole world, and by America in particular, toward altruistic and sympathetic ideals. Each year more people join the ranks of those who are thinking, planning, working and giving money to bring better surroundings, shorter hours of labor and increased opportunities for pleasure and education to the toilers of earth.

Never on earth before were so many good people working toward such noble ends for their fellows, and in all the unrest and dissatisfaction of the present day we must not lose sight of this great fact. Never were there so many people of great wealth devoting time and effort to helpfulness as now.

One good woman gives a fortune every year to capable and honest and industrious men and women who are working under her direction to find the causes and the remedy for poverty and sickness in the ranks of labor. Another has devoted a fortune to helping seafaring men and their families, besides giving unstintedly to other worthy causes.

Another has spent a million dollars on efforts to teach the world to be kinder to children and animals. And this means awakening new brain cells of sympathy and brotherhood in new generations.

A multi-millionaire has spent half a million already in finding work for the unemployed on vacant land, and is still busily toiling to increase the supply of land and laborers.

Besides these there are armies of others giving money, time and effort to bring happiness to less fortunate fellows.

Let us be glad that we live in such an age—the best and greatest the world has ever known.

In Chicago there is a great circle of noble men and women called the Central Howard Association. Its object is

1. Employment finding for released prisoners.
2. Legislation for the improvement of prisons and the prevention of crime.
3. Probation and parole serving as "First Friend" to men under surveillance.
4. Correspondence with prisoners for their encouragement and with the public in their behalf.
5. Publicity, through platform and press, of prison abuses and the best scientific methods of treatment.
6. Prison evangelism, by personal appeal and annual Christmas message, to a higher life.

There are many such organizations in the land.

TOO MUCH FOR ONE==TOO LITTLE FOR MANY

Those that are cunning and powerful dam up the stream of wealth. They get for themselves all that they want, too much, and for the rest of the people is left TOO LITTLE—that which trickles over the dam when the big man has had his fill.

Many masters of money and industry are dipping into the dammed up stream of wealth and special privilege today, while those below get too little. But it will not be thus always. And there is a good as well as a bad side to the picture of "Industry and Civilization" as it is today.

The exposure and explanation of modern industrial methods given to the public in the new Standard Oil letters appearing in successive numbers of Hearst's Magazine tell the story of special privilege vividly.

ALL of the political parties, and a great many scattered wise men are asking themselves or telling others what it is that causes scarcity and anxiety in the country, whence comes what we all call just now "high cost of living."

There is one answer and a very simple one that fits the conditions. Those that are responsible for law and that are working for progress should know the answer, which is this:

A few of us---very few---have a great deal too much. And a very great many of us have too little.

We have tens of millions of citizens worried about the future and worried about the present as well

There is in this country not only wealth enough for all—if it were intelligently developed and justly distributed—but wealth enough for a population ten times and a hundred times as great as the population of today.

Millions of acres are uncultivated. Millions upon millions are cultivated badly and yield half a crop or less—because the workers lack money and knowledge

Power is going to waste in the waterfalls, or if it is used it is used as monopoly, to make a few rich instead of making the millions free from bodily slavery.

There are machines enough to clothe the whole population—but the mills and the sewing machines stop when a small percentage are well and beautifully clothed—the others haven't the money.

The production of food is already ample—but intelligence and cunning scheme to make millions by the sale of food at high prices—and there is no counteracting benevolent wisdom to work for wide distribution at a low price.

The crops of a nation this year will be wonderful in their abundance—the corn and wheat and oats will be cornered and manipulated. This broker that speculator, an endless army of middlemen and profit takers, will take their millions.

And when the distribution of the great crop is over, those that store up wealth and take more than their share will have new millions. And those that produced the wealth from the soil will be only about as well off as they were before—having just enough to keep going. And those that consume the earth's productions will pay the top price for only as little as will keep them going and worry and fret as they pay for that little.

A great army of consumers paying the top price for what they get:

A great army of workers struggling to get fair wages for what they produce;

And between the two, the far-seeing manipulator and organizer, who has put a dam across the stream of wealth and who dips out his millions, his TOO MUCH, while the others must be contented with their TOO LITTLE.

To those that see only the events of today and today's injustice this is a depressing world full of discouragement—almost without hope.

Every development in our history means that somebody gets a great deal for which he has worked little or not at all.

The great Steel Trust is formed—gigantic industrial structure based on the solid foundation of iron that the country must have. And those that organized this structure "take" one thousand millions dollars in artificially created stock for their pains.

The industry is purchased in a lump for $500,000,000 or less. And it is sold to the public for fifteen hundred millions. And on this vast capitalization the public must forever pay dividends—the consumer must pay, and the cost of living, of building, or rent, must go higher.

Fortunately, there is a bright as well as a dark side to industrial conditions; to the picture that shows us a few with too much, not knowing how to spend what they have, and the millions with too little, always worried and anxious about the days to come.

That which is an evil today luckily is often a blessing tomorrow.

The old warriors built their acqueducts that fresh, pure water might be brought TO THEM, TO THEIR PALACES, TO THEIR BATHS.

They built their great roads that they might travel in comfort and safety that they might send their armies to fight, murder and pillage.

Those warriors and those armies that murdered are gone. But the work remains, and that which was splendid selfishly is used unselfishly for all. The great monument temple, city or park built to commemorate the egotist, remains for the education and delight of all—AND THE EGOTIST IS DEAD, FORGOTTEN, DUST.

It will be so when the time comes to write the history of our civilization which seems so unjust, so cruel, so brutal in its unfair distribution.

The cunning organizers plan and scheme. They combine their industries, their railroads, their public monopolies.

They take the millions of the public and give back little, and keep much for themselves.

Their thought is on their own power and fortune and pleasure.

But the cunning schemers of today will also pass away and become dust without a name—AND THEIR WORK WILL STAND

A few may monopolize the power of Niagara or of the great falls in the West. BUT AT LAST THEY DO HARNESS THE POWER, and the people can take it and use it for themselves when they will.

The builders of railroads make their vast fortunes and leave them to be squandered. They pass away, THE ROADS REMAIN.

In days to come a people more intelligent than ourselves will be grateful for the selfishness and ability that did the constructive work of this day and left an industrial system ready to the hands of the people, great economical factors, wasteful competition eliminated, a network of railroads and wires covering the country, bringing the people together AND EVENTUALLY BELONGING TO THE PEOPLE.

You cannot tell who dug the well in the desert from which you drink. But you know that he dug it for himself, selfishly, without a doubt. And you know that he is dead and gone and thousands of others drink from it.

So it is with all the efforts of man, especially of the great men—great in cunning, fortune and power.

They strive for themselves, BUT THEY BUILD FOR OTHERS. They cannot help it.

And when you see a man who builds a wall across the stream of wealth, dams it up and forms a great golden reservoir for himself, you can find comfort in the knowledge that, without knowing it, he builds that dam for the millions that are to come. He organizes, preserves, simplifies, and if his name happens to be remembered it will be as that of one who selfishly thinking to help only himself, wore out his strength and power in working for others.

The intelligent man should see both sides of every question, the good in that which seems absolutely bad to the ignorant.

We should see the evil in the conditions OF TODAY in order to hurry forward the better time.

For those that want to know of the modern conditions, there is information in the extraordinary series of hitherto unpublished letters from the files of the Standard Oil Company, which are now appearing from month to month in Hearst's Magazine.

Readers whose minds are serious and who want to know how this country is ruled and why that which we call a republic piles up millions for a few and necessity for many, owe it to themselves to read those letters in the current number of Hearst's Magazine and in the issues that are to follow.

Among the letters published this month you find a member of Congress, Sibley, humbly asking Archbold of the Standard Oil, "if you think of any thing for me to do, let me know," and you find this man obeying his master's orders—his REAL master, the Standard Oil, and paying no attention to the public that hires him and pays him.

You find the Standard ruler, Archbold, showing his appreciation of an humble servant by fighting for him in the elections, by writing to a former president of the Pennsylvania railroad and to others recommending the humble public official as one to be relied upon by organized money.

In the same series of letters you find that the faithful watchdog Sibley writes to Archbold that he must interest himself in Senator Bailey of Texas, who is "prepared to make a great fight against the vicious principle that the government" can open the books of corporations and investigate them.

These letters that reveal our system of government based on organized finance give to the intelligent man a picture of life and conditions and influences at work that nothing else can give.

You find a man like Bailey of Texas—whose character is now known to you, thanks to this newspaper, recommended to the Standard Oil in these words:

"He has the courage and the ability to make a legal argument on the floor of the Senate second to no man of that body.

"Had you ought not to have consultation with him some day?

And you soon find that the Standard Oil does indeed find it worth while "To have a consultation with him some day."

You find the Standard Oil agreeing to supply a great amount of money to a United States Senator—an amount so great that even the Standard Oil requests an arrangement "To pay it in installments."

Hearst's Magazine fac-similes the letters of Archbold. In one letter to the Senator you read:

> "It now gives me pleasure to enclose you certificate of deposit to your favor for $12,500 in fulfillment of promise."

In another letter to the Senator you read:

> "My Dear Senator—In accordance with request in your favor to me of the 23d, I now beg to enclose you cashier's check National City Bank of New York, to your favor for $10,000.
> "Very truly yours,
> "Jno D. Archbold."

When the Standard Oil hasn't a convenient paid employe of the people to use as a messenger to the President or to others it employes other tools.

The Trusts wanted a certain Senator elected and the Standard Oil agent, always ready to oblige those that he relied on to betray their trust to the people, writes, "I have asked our people to do everything they can through the Santa Fe."

In this case, as you see, the power of a railroad which controls public men and some votes and some newspapers is to be used to put into the United States Senate another man that will serve organized money instead of the public.

The publication of these Standard Oil letters in "Hearst's Magazine" is a great service to the public and a great enlightenment.

They show how the people are controlled and betrayed through those hired to work for the people.

But neither Standard Oil letters nor revelations of any kind need discourage the earnest citizen.

The truth at least is coming out.

Those that care to know how the country is ruled CAN KNOW.

Such an organization as the Standard Oil, corrupt in some of its details and vicious in management as it may be, is a great lesson in organization, economy and efficiency.

It is one of many machines built up in this country for personal profit that will in the end show the way to public ownership and public prosperity.

Mermaids in Gay Sport at Shore Resorts

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT

W[illegible] have invaded the New England coast and the winged god is in a perfect flutter

If [illegible] tell the tale the Summer girl of 1912 is a mermaid and [illegible] to her [illegible] has her bond to the briny deep. From each baptism of the waves she emerges with increased [illegible] is not more exquisite and delightfully wholesome than this same Summer girl

She effervesces with life that [illegible] Health and high spirits are her's in [illegible] and pretty as a bisque doll and she just laughs [illegible] The very sight of her would bring a smile to even the great stone face—[illegible] It's a busy time she is giving Dan [illegible] who attempts to chronicle the numerous engagements for which this [illegible] will be responsible.

[illegible]

Gay Life Along North Shore

At Newport, the fashionable North [illegible] and the Maine resorts the [illegible] at the North Shore [illegible] particularly gay by these [illegible] sirens, who from early morn[illegible] until late at night are floating [illegible] like so many lilies on the [illegible] of the ocean or lying in all [illegible] of beautifully fashioned [illegible] on the warm sands [illegible] at the beach of [illegible] at Manchester, [illegible] Sears is the one to whom all look for the most daring of stunts—the highest dive, the longest swim and the highest jump, in the [illegible] on the shore. Then, too, it is [illegible] that this will be the last Summer Miss Sears will spend on the North Shore as Miss Sears, for, with all the gossip and comment anent [illegible] various engagements, there is still [illegible] new [illegible] which is said to be [illegible] by those who under [illegible]

HUNDREDS TOURING CAPE COD VISITING HOTELS AND CAMPS

HUNDREDS of parties have been touring Cape Cod from Buzzards Bay to Provincetown during the week, stopping at the various hotels and camps, enjoying a day here and there, boating and fishing. Charles C. Strong of New York made a record catch of landing a 120-pound shark from the sloop Hattie B with a striped bass rod at Horseshoe shoals. Mr. Strong was thirty-five minutes landing the monster, but said it was the greatest sport he ever had. The Taylor brothers of Hyannis, with a party from St. Louis, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Marshall, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Stanley, Miss J. B. Joyce and Frank Andrews in catboat Sea Gull brought in eighty five bluefish, the catch of one day off Bishop and Clark's lighthouse.

Late arrivals at Hyannisport are Mr and Mrs. A. W. Lambert and family of Brockton, P. G. Healey and family of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wall of Boston, Mr and Mrs. William H. Hanley of New York, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Chase and family of Worcester, Mr. Thomas Rayburn and family of St. Louis, William J. Mullins and family, Franklin, Pa.

President William A. Taft and wife have accepted an invitation to visit the Barnstable county fair on Aug. 29, and the summer colonies have joined with the executive committee to make this year's fair the largest and best in the history of the association, and to show the President that although the Cape is referred to as one of the sandiest spots along the New England coast, it can produce some of the finest fruit and vegetables, as well as live stock, as any place in the State of Massachusetts. Governor Foss and staff will be present on the 28th, when, as the old Cape Cod politicians say, "Is the day when all candidates for public office launch their campaigns."

At Sagamore Beach.

Sagamore Beach is receiving its full quota of visitors. Mrs. Ruth Tinkham entertained through the week a house party of seven young ladies, consisting of Miss Florence B. Hunt of Fall River and the Misses Barbara Murdock, Bertha Salisbury and Winifred Olndorf, Gladys Nickerson, Gertrude Nickerson and Gertrude Lothrop, all of Taunton.

Secretary William Shaw's cottage has been occupied this month by Mrs. Joseph Shaw and family of Ballardville. They have entertained Mr. and Mrs. George Miller and daughter during the C. E. Institute. The Loker family have been spending several days at the beach, and returned to Natick the first of the week. Late arrivals at the hotel: Mrs. Emily Sawyer, Lakewood, N. J.; J. H. Nye, Miss Florence G. Nye and Miss N. Nelson, New York; Misses Margaret and Florence Simms, James Simms, Boston; Mr. and Mrs. J. H. McCleve joined Mr and Mrs. Campbell at the Howard cottage over Sunday.

Mrs. D. P. W. Parker of Barnstable has been entertaining Miss Laura Sears, Mr and Mrs. Ralph D. Kelley, Miss Carrie Rogers, and Mrs. Lillie Parker of Boston; Henry C. Everett and family of Boston have opened their cottage on the Nort Shore Road. Bradford Coyle and family are occupying the Brown cottage; Mr and Mrs. Maurice C. Hallett are entertaining Mr. and Mrs. Kirk of Chicago. J. R. Clarke of Boston spent the week end with Mr and Mrs. Desmond Fitzgerald; [illegible] Frank H. Briggs has opened his bungalow at Scudder's Wharf for the season. Mr. A. Frank Sherman of Boston spent the week end with his mother, Mrs. A. F. Sherman. Miss Mary B. Coffin is entertaining Mrs. Cheney of Newport. After spending two weeks with his sister, Miss Elizabeth Nye, Marcus Nye has returned to New York. Herbert Holway and daughter Elizabeth have opened their summer home at East Mattapoisett.

Yachts at Woods Hole.

Many New York yachts have been in the harbor at Woods Hole lately. One of the largest ocean steam yachts in the world, the Diana, chartered by C. Ledyard Blair of New York, was conspicuous in the fleet.

Captain Charles R. Grinnell of the fishing yacht Restless captured another monster swordfish off Gayhead Light. There were 180 pounds of edible flesh on this big fellow.

On Saturday evening, August 3, the play, "How the Vote was Won," will be given in Liberty Hall by visiting suffragettes, or so the ladies who have volunteered advertise themselves, for the benefit of the public library.

Among those who have recently registered at Hotel Breakwater at Woods Hole for an extended stay are the following from New York City: Mrs. Calvin S. May and Miss May, Mrs. S. M. Cauldwell, Mr Theodore Wilkins, Miss Margaret Brown, Miss Mary Flexner, Mr and Mrs. Edward S. Robinson and Miss Robinson, Mr. and Mrs W. G. Taylor, Miss Taylor and Master Taylor, W. R. Gresham, R. D. Janney, Mrs. H. C. M. Thomson and Miss Dorothy Thomson, Mr and Mrs. William McKenney, Mrs. Philip Shaw, Mrs. G. B. Childs, Mr. Arthur E. Goddard, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Waterman, Miss H. F. Lindsley, Mr and Mrs. W. I. Ferris, O. B. Stillman, H. A. Waterbury and E. P. Kingsland.

Registered at the Breakwater from Boston are Mr. and Mrs. W. Percy Arnold, Mrs. John Hawes, Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Sharpe, Mrs. Charles W. Leatherbee, Mrs. Charles H. Bailey and Miss Eva Bailey and Colonel G. D. Fitch, U. S. A. Among other recent arrivals at the Breakwater are Mr. and Mrs. Irving R. Bailey and Miss Beatrice Bailey of Akron, O.; Professor and Mrs. Robert Kennedy Duncan of Pittsburgh, who came to Woods Hole in their White car; Professor Alfred O. Compton and Mrs. Compton of Columbia University; Dr. Harold Wilson and Miss Marion Wilson, who came from Detroit in Dr. Wilson's "Hup"; Dr. Charles A. L. Reed of Cincinnati; Mrs. Harmon Hurlburt of Putney, Vt.; Mrs. Fitch of Croton Falls, N. Y., and her nephew, Mr. Charles McQueston of Croton Falls; Mrs. C. W. Nash of Albany, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Harry S. Green of Woonsocket, R. I., and Mrs. Charles Farnsworth and family of Colorado Springs.

Provincetown Is Lively.

Provincetown Harbor is made lively this week by the large fleet of fishing schooners and the fifteen or more steam seine boats that have come in to catch the porgies that are visiting these waters again after years of absence. The steamers are operating purse seines and are doing well. The seiner A. B. Nickerson caught 100 barrels of blueback herring and 2,000 mackerel last Sunday.

Among those who have recently come to Provincetown for a week or more at the Central House, Mr and Mrs. N. C. Fowler, Miss Mary P. Fowler and N. C. Fowler Jr., and Mr and Mrs. F. E. Arnsden of Boston, Mr. George H. Mowrey and Edmund Lawless of Woonsocket; Mr. and Mrs. George H. Crocker of Providence; Mr and Mrs. James R. Lowry, Edmund J. Lowry and John F. Lowry of Pawtucket; Mr. Edmund Bodine and Mr. Charles Finch of New Rochelle, Mr. George S. Sizer of Metuchen, N. J.; Miss J. Elizabeth Newton and Miss Caroline W. Pitkin of New York; Prof. P. H. Cobb of Portland, Me., and Mr. F. A. Kuehl of Medford, Mass.

At the Gifford House are registered, Mrs. Philip J. Sands, Miss Anne A. Sands, Mrs. John Moore Dickinson and Miss M. F. Lewis, of New York; Mrs. H. S. Wright of Brooklyn, who is a student at the Hawthorne Art School in Provincetown; Miss E. M. Hall, Miss Flagg and Miss Dixon of New Haven, Mrs. J. S. Chadwick of Leominster, Mass.; Mr. Charles Rolfe of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Crawford and Miss Clare Crawford of New Haven; Miss Lillian Smith of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. F. Opper of Stamford, Conn.; Miss Woodhouse of Rutland, Vt.; Mrs. I. West and Miss Lillian West of Newton, Mass.

Those newly registered at the Mattaquason at Chatham include from New York, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. [illegible], Mr. F. J. Rigby and Miss Rigby, Dr. E. L. Morse, Mr. R. [illegible] Mattocks and Miss Mattocks. Others are Mr. and Mrs. S. V. R. Bourste[illegible], Mr. F. B. Alvord and Miss Alvord of East Orange, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Swindell, Mr. and Mrs. James F. Hooker and the Misses Hooker of Schenectady, N. Y.; Mr. Stanley Bishop and Miss Elizabeth M. Duffy of Brookline; William R. Gray, Miss Mary Gray, Mr. Joseph H. Gray of Elizabeth, N. Rip-p-p-p-p! Out Come Thousands of Dress Shields!

Hereafter, Madame, You Are Going to Feel More "Comfy" Under the Arms.

No More Ruined Gowns, No More Dress Shields, If You Use PERSPI-NO.

PERSPI-NO keeps the arm-pits just as fresh and dry as any other part of the body. You can wear any weight of clothing, be in hot stuffy rooms, in a warm theatre or dance-hall and never over-perspire in the arm-pits. The colors in a colored gown will never run. The cloth will never fade, get stiff from perspiration and then rot and tear and ruin your gown at the arm-pits. Nevermore!

No more rolling up of dress shields like ropes under the arms. PERSPI-NO is a delightful powder, absolutely safe for everybody, and never harms any fabric. It's a wonder. Try it once, and be convinced. You apply it with a pad, which is packed with every box.

New Vitality for Any Man

The man who possesses an abundant vital supply cannot grow old, he will remain young to the end of his days.

If, my friend, you feel the need of new vigor I believe I can show you how you yourself can easily regain it without the use of a single drug or medicine. The method which I recommend is fully explained in a little 80-page, illustrated book, which I will be pleased to send you free, sealed, by mail upon request. (See coupon below.) The system, in reality, is one of revitalization by means of an appliance which I invented and call my HEALTH BELT. You wear this HEALTH BELT nights. As soon as applied it commences sending a great flow of VITALITY into your body which continues hour after hour while you sleep.

There is merely a warm pleasant feeling, which means that new strength and vigor are being added to your nerves, blood and organs. The HEALTH BELT is practically indestructible and not a penny of expense to you from the time you put it on the first night until the whole treatment is completed. Please remember there are no drugs or medicines to take, no dieting, no rules for exercise, no hardships of any sort.

This new method often takes the pain or weakness out of your back in a few hours time while you commence to feel better almost from the start. Ninety days is usually sufficient to build up your nerves and body so that you will probably look better and feel better than you have ever looked or felt before. Your friends will soon commence to secretly marvel at the change in your appearance, while you will unconsciously answer "Never felt better in my life" to their greetings.

As your system absorbs the new strength, rheumatism, kidney, liver and stomach troubles disappear.

Please use coupon to get free book by mail, or call and test the HEALTH BELT. Hours, 9 to 6. Weekdays only.

GLOUCESTER BEACHES DELIGHT HUNDREDS OF GAY VACATIONISTS

MIDSUMMER at Gloucester is its most delightful season, the short-term vacationists arriving for their season of frolic and turning the beaches into one vast pleasure ground. Perhaps the most important announcement from a society standpoint is the coming festivity to be given by Mrs. John Hays Hammond, who is Gloucester's foremost social leader.

Prominent among the shore sojourners at the Wheeler's Point settlement are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Bell, who are among the Gloucester visitors at that beach.

Mr. and Mrs. Fitz McIntosh are located for their annual visit at their Summer camp at Wheeler's Point. Mr. McIntosh is prominent in official circles of Gloucester, being city messenger.

Occupying the Equanuiti cottage for the Summer is Miss Annie Glynn, who is among the regular residents at the settlement on Wheeler's Point. She is entertaining her sisters for the shore term, Miss Bina Glynn and Miss Sarah Glynn.

Lillian Russell's Warning.
Sore Feet: Bad Health

Lillian Russell is a physical wonder. Now in mature years, but having preserved the fresh beauty of youth. In the Chicago Tribune she says: "Care of the feet, hardest worked members of the body, is absolutely essential to health. Irritation from sore feet often causes serious nervous disorders, and nothing brings face wrinkles quicker." Here is the best treatment known to science for all foot ailments. It works through the pores and removes the cause: "Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of Calocide compound in a basin of warm water. Soak the feet in this for full fifteen minutes, gently rubbing the sore parts." The effect is magical. All soreness disappears instantly. Corns and callouses can be peeled right off. It gives instant relief for bunions, aching and sweaty smelly feet. Any druggist has Calocide in stock or will quickly get it from his wholesale house. A twenty-five cent box usually cures the worst feet. Calocide is not a patent medicine. Don't waste money on uncertain remedies. Insist on getting what you want from the druggist.

Dr. E. L. Saunders, with Mrs. Saunders and George Saunders of Boston are passing the remaining weeks of Summer at the Bellevue.

Mrs. Frederick Bogardus of the Bellevue is entertaining her daughter, mother, Mrs. Anna Fells of Lowell, for a short stay.

Visitors Aid Progress of Hull

SUMMER hobbies at Hull are extremely practical affairs, especially the Village Improvement Society, which unites the leading members of both Summer and Winter society. Especially was this true when the members of the society held a sale to secure funds for their numerous projects, an affair which called out visitors from the other settlements along the shore. Several dainty things were contributed and met with ready sale, assuring the committee in charge of a comfortable profit.

The president of the association is Mrs. James R. Hooper, who is just now absent absent in Europe, whither she went for a short continental journey. Wonderful results have been accomplished by the society in turning Hull into a spotless town, and the efforts among the juniors met with great success, it being their province to keep the streets clean of papers and provide for waste receptacles.

Frequent news comes from Miss Bacon and her niece, Miss May Bacon, who are touring the Continent in company with Charles Bacon, who is on his annual business tour.

Mr. and Mrs. James A. Bailey of Arlington have established their household at their Hull residence for the shore season.

Mrs. James B. Chase of Brookline has joined the cottagers at the Hull colony, arriving for a long stay.

Sojourning at the Hull shore is G. W. Cushman of Boston, who has closed his apartments at the Copley Square Hotel for the beach period.

At their Hull cottage are Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Blanchard and their household. They are season visitors.

The [illegible] cottage is occupied for the Summer by Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Burque, who were among the more recent arrivals.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Wyman of Brookline have joined the cottage sojourners for the heated term, taking a house on the Hull shore for their outing.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Watson and their family are among the Boston residents at the Hull colony, where they have a cottage for the season.

Mrs. J. Touchet is among the Bostonians to take a shore home at Hull for the season.

Occupying their shore home on James avenue for the Summer are Mr. and Mrs. J. A. May and their family.

CLIFTON

Among the recent affairs given by the Clifton shore contingent was a concert, at which several members of the colony contributed talent for the program. Among them were Miss Kate Thomas and Miss Marjorie Shaw and Miss Marion Hult, on the violin; Raymond Ellis, who played the cello; Mrs. Herbert D. Foss, Mrs. C. B. Deveraux, Benjamin Small and Russell Ellis, who were the soloists, and Mrs. Ackerly, Miss Louise Shaw and Miss Ackerly, who presided at the piano.

The Wednesday matinee whists and the Saturday evening bridge parties at the Casino are a large factor in the social gaiety of the colony and bring out large gatherings. Recent successful players at these events were Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Penniman, Mrs. G. O. North and Mrs. J. Carleton Rogers.

Recent guests include Mr. and Mrs. B. S. Martin of Winchester, who have been the house guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Deveraux.

Among the visiting contingent are Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Badger and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur C. Badger, of Winchester, who are the guests of Mrs. Henry C. Hayden of the Clifton Heights colony.

Mrs. R. L. Baker is entertaining Mrs. J. W. Blaisdell.

Mr. and Mrs. Stearns R. Ellis of Cambridge are included among the season cottagers at the Heights, where they have been since the early Summer.

MANCHESTER

The country fair yesterday, the dinner dance on Friday evening at the Essex County Club and the innumerable other smart events means that society at Manchester is really waking up, and that this is the start for the long and brilliant array of smart events which will continue through August.

The dinner dance was the first affair of its kind this season, and that it was well patronized goes without saying. Among those who entertained large parties were Miss Mabel Boardman, Mrs. Prescott Bigelow, Mrs. Washington B. Thomas, Harrison K. Kaner, James C. Barr, John N. Willys, George F. Warren, Mrs. Thomas McKee, Mrs. Gordon Abbot and Mrs. S. Parker Bremer.

Another event of importance to society at Manchester was the races the Manchester Yacht Club held on Friday. On the committee were George Mansfield, Reginald Boardman, John W. Harwood and Robert F. P. [illegible].

Mr. and Mrs. Hayden B. Harris of Brookline, who are at the Sampson cottage at Manchester this season, have as their house guests Mr. and Mrs. Norman W. Harris of Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Harris have given several entertainments in honor of their guests.

Representing Baltimore at Manchester this season are the Eliot Sumners, who are at their cottage on Smith's Point.

Mrs. Rufus A. Greene of Boston, who is at the Brownland cottage at Manchester this Summer, has had as her guest her niece, Miss Newell of Boston. Miss Newell is a daughter of the late A. W. Newell, who was president of the Fourth National Bank in Boston.

The Turkish embassy at Manchester is celebrating the arrival of a pretty baby girl in their midst, born to Ibrahim Zia Bey, second secretary of the Turkish embassy, and Madame Zia. This season the embassy is at the Roberts cottage at the corner of Harbor and Bridge streets.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Chase of Milton, who have a beautiful Summer home at Manchester, are now on the Maine coast, where they are to spend several weeks. They were recently at Seal Harbor, where they were joined by Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Brown, also of Manchester. Mrs. Chase and Mrs. Brown are sisters.

MRS. HORACE B. STANTON.

Mrs. Horace B. Stanton of Brimmer street is considered one of the handsomest women of the younger matron set and is always a conspicuous figure at the opera, where her beautiful gowns attract no end of admiring attention.

Who Said Corns?
I Use "GETS-IT!"

It Works on a Sure, New Plan.

"Glory! Come and See How GETS-IT Works!"

"GETS-IT," the new corn cure on a new principle, works like the touch of a fairy's wand. No more knives, razors, files or other instruments of torture for corn sufferers. No more salves, plasters and bandages that hurt the rest of the toe more than they relieve the corn.

"GETS-IT" never irritates or turns the true flesh raw. It is safe as water. But my, how it does get after corns, bunions, callouses and warts. It works painlessly, but it shrivels 'em right up till they drop off, leaving the firm, healthy flesh underneath.

"GETS-IT" is guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is refunded.

All druggists sell "GETS-IT" at 25 cents a bottle, or it will be sent on receipt of price by E. Lawrence & Co., Chicago. Sold in Boston at all Riker-Jaynes stores.

Marblehead Is Interested in Fete

DESPITE the absence of many of the fleet from the Marblehead Harbor on account of the Boston Yacht Club [illegible] there was sufficient diversion for the daily visitors and the cottage folk in the village and at the Neck.

For the S[illegible] the most important event was the lawn fete given for the benefit of the Children's Boston Floating Hospital [illegible] the attractive Butman estate on A[illegible] was prepared to give an [illegible] of pleasure to the Marblehead [illegible]. The committee in charge was [illegible] things for their tables and [illegible] eagerly bought by appreciative [illegible]. Such prominent leaders as M[illegible] Mrs. L. Cushing K[illegible] Chester L. Dane, Miss Harriet [illegible] Mrs. Herbert E. Yerxa, Mrs. [illegible] Mrs. W. J. Hammond and M[illegible] Butman managed the affair and [illegible] for its success.

Society along shore has given a warm welcome to Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Dow of Brookline, who lately arrived for the remaining weeks of Summer. They are established at their new home on [illegible] street, and their cottage will be [illegible] tre of much social gaiety during their stay.

Mrs. J. W. Peabody is passing the vacation season at Marblehead Neck, coming from her Haverhill home for the Summer term.

Recent arrivals include Mr. and Mrs. Arthur S. Austin, who have closed their home on Marlboro street to take possession of the Evans house at Peach's Point. This was the former residence of President and Mrs. Taft, and was brought across the bay last season and added to the little colony at the point. They will remain through the Summer.

Mr. and Mrs. N. J. Hult have come up from Martha's Vineyard for a visit to the North Shore and are registered at the Neck for their stay.

SEA VIEW

Sea View's soft, cooling breezes have been the means of bringing many visitors to the resort during the past weeks and the little settlement is now crowded almost to its limit. The cottage life here is very attractive, the charming informality of it making the visitors' outing a most pleasant one.

Miss Minnie Mullaly of South Boston is among the regular Summer residents to arrive for her season stay, on which occasion she was greeted by her many friends at the resort.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Smith of West Roxbury are again occupying their beach cottage for their annual visit of several months.

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Cushing of Medford are season visitors at Humarock Beach, where they have a cottage for their stay.

TESTED RECIPES FOR BEAUTY SEEKERS

WHEN THE HAIR IS "STRINGY"—For "mussy," unruly hair, shampoo with a teaspoonful canthrox dissolved in a cup hot water. This creates a wealth of rich, penetrating lather that allays irritation and dissolves every atom of dust, dandruff and excess oil. Rinsing leaves the hair and scalp immaculately clean and the hair dries quickly, with an even color, rich gloss and silken fluff. Canthrox shampoos are particularly good during the heated term, for they overcome that "stickiness" and permit of the hair being arranged in any style.

FOR ROUGH, SHINY SKINS—Put 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine into ½ pint witch hazel (or hot water), then add 4 ounces spurmax and you will have a very superior lotion for the skin. This should be used in place of powder, as it imparts a true pink and white flesh-tint to the skin and cannot be detected when on. The spurmax lotion is splendid for dispelling the oily, sallow condition, and to a rough, age-marred skin lends an exquisite smoothness. For tan, sunburn and freckles the spurmax lotion is especially fine.

THIS DISSOLVES FAT—Put 4 ounces parnotis into 1½ pints hot water, and when it cools take a tablespoonful before each meal. This will gradually dissolve the fatty tissues without leaving the skin wrinkled. No harm results from the parnotis treatment, and when the weight is where you want it the flesh will not be flabby.

FOR LONG, CURLY LASHES—With thumb and forefinger apply some pyroxin at lash-roots and they will grow long, curly and silky. Thin eyebrows should be rubbed with pyroxin applied with the finger-end. This makes them come in thick and lustrous. Use care not to get any pyroxin where no hair is wanted.

VALUABLE HAIR-TONIC—A really excellent hair and scalp-tonic can be made at home for a small sum by mixing together 1 ounce quinzoin and ½ pint each alcohol and water. This tonic is soothing to tender, itchy scalps, and its continued use corrects scalp troubles as well as induces an abundance of thick, glossy hair. Nothing can surpass this quinzoin tonic for restoring the former even color and fluff to faded, "stringy" hair.

TO REMOVE HAIR OR FUZZ—With a little water mix enough powdered delatone to form a paste. Spread on hairy surface, then after 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and the hairs have vanished. No harm results using delatone and one application usually is all that is required.

FOR PIMPLES AND SALLOWNESS—Impure blood is frequently indicated by pimples, blotches or a "muddy" complexion. An old-fashioned kardene tonic is splendid to rid the system of these poisons, and to make it, put 1 ounce kardene in ½ pint alcohol, then add ½ cupful sugar and enough hot water to make a quart. Taking a tablespoonful three times a day soon rids the blood of its impurities, builds up worn, waste tissues and fortifies the system against disease. This tonic is especially fine to use during hot weather, and will give to the skin a clearness and health-tint unobtainable any other way.

FOR SORE, ACHING EYES—Dissolve 1 ounce crystos in a pint cold, clear water and you will have the finest kind of eye-tonic. Putting 2 or 3 drops in the eye relieves the burning and soothes aching muscles. This crystos eye-tonic is particularly good to remove foreign particles and for granulated lids. Its occasional use will give a youthful sparkle and expression to the dullest eyes.

WHEN THE SKIN FRECKLES—Rubbing a plain almozoin cream-jelly on the skin will remove freckles, tan and other blemishes. To prepare this cream-jelly, pour 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine into ½ pint water, then add 1 ounce almozoin. Let stand over night before using. This cream-jelly is excellent for removing lines and rounding out hollows, and a few applications will banish surface pimples, skin-roughness and that sallow, oily look.

COMES AT LAST WITH WORDS OF TRIUMPH

LOVED BY IRELAND'S SONS

By C. O'CONNELL GALVIN.

When W[illegible] Redmond, M. P., the eloquent younger brother of the Irish leader, comes to Boston in October to address a home rule mass meeting, he is sure to re[illegible] most enthusiastic reception of his whole brilliant and patriotic career.

No man in the entire Irish party is more popular with his race in every section of the world than "Willie" Redmond, as he is affectionately called by tens of thousands of his country people, in Australia, in Canada, the United States and at home on both sides of the Irish Sea.

It is more than a quarter of a century since William Redmond first entered the ranks of the Irish National movement. He had but barely turned his majority—his twenty-first birthday he spent in Kilmainham jail—when his eloquence, his patriotic fervor and his willingness to do the part of not one, but of ten men, in the great fight of the Land League, brought him close to the watchful eye of Mr Parnell, who w[illegible] the first stages of the best [illegible] ever waged in the world's history against the power and tyranny of feudalism.

Got Big Task Early.

Recognizing [illegible] ability, Parnell placed [illegible] of responsibility upon the shoulders of John and William Redmond. The Irish people of the Australian colonies had cabled to Parnell asking that a delegation be sent out from Ireland to organize the Land League in those distant countries and thus enable the people there to take a hand in the fight for their motherland.

The request was heeded by Parnell although, out of his little band of thirty fighting [illegible] he found it difficult to spare [illegible] especially to go on a mission 16,000 miles from home.

But the great leader saw also the need of world wide organization and he decided to send the Redmonds to Australia.

As in all his other moves, Parnell showed keen and accurate discernment in his choice. Never were ambassadors from Ireland more successful. From the day of their landing in Australia the brothers devoted themselves with crusader zeal to the work they had been sent to perform.

Their tour of the distant colonies was extraordinary in many ways. Their own nationalist friends and supporters rallied to them by the thousands, not only in the great cities, like Melbourne, Sydney, Adelaide, Auckland and Brisbane, but in the bush settlements of the arid interior, where the scarcity of railroads forced them to travel many hundreds of miles by buggy or on horseback.

Bitter Tory Opposition.

While their reception on the part of the sympathizers with the Irish national cause was of the warmest and heartiest kind, the two youthful envoys experienced most unpleasant treatment from another quarter.

In the large cities especially a very bitter movement was built up in hostility to their mission with the aid of the tory colonial press, acting under pressure and advice from London. Halls were closed against them. So were the columns of the leading newspapers, while the most virulent misrepresentation was brought into play to prejudice the public opinion of Australia against John and William Redmond as the ambassadors of Parnell and of Ireland.

Weaker men would have quailed before the opposition. But the Redmonds were not of the stuff that quails and they went on with their work, traveling night and day, lecturing, organizing and, most important of all, raising money to help Parnell carry on his battle at home.

Mighty Work Was Done.

It would take more space than can be spared today to tell the whole story of this long ago mission to Australia. No more need be said than that it was a wonderful success, despite all the obstacles put up against it. Branches of the Land League were founded on strong lines in every centre of Irish population throughout Victoria, Tasmania and New Zealand. And when the Redmonds were ordered home by their leader they had started a work of organization which continues in strength to this hour.

No greater proof of this continuance of loyalty to the cause of Ireland among Irish Australians can be asked for than the fact that, within the past year, more than $100,000 has been sent home to help keep up the fight for home rule. It will be of added interest to insert the information that one of the most eloquent of the envoys who collected this money was Mr John Redmond's son, William Archer Redmond, who was elected in 1910 as member for East Tyrone. In his tour Mr. Redmond, Jr., had the able assistance of Mr. Hazleton, M. P., for North Galway, and Mr. Donovan, a gifted Nationalist lawyer from Belfast.

Their tour across this country from the Golden Gate to New York was one continuous triumph. Whatever they had suffered in Australia at the hands of the tory orange conspiracy was well made up for by the warmth of the welcome they got from all classes and creeds in America.

Boston's Gates Thrown Open.

Their grandest greeting was here in Boston. Under the leadership of John Boyle O'Reilly, Patrick A. Collins, T. B. Fitzpatrick, Patrick Donahue, Thomas Flatley, Father McKenna of Marlboro, the Rev. Dr. Conaty of Worcester, now the revered bishop of Los Angeles, and many other prominent sons of the Irish race, the Messrs. Redmond were given in Boston an almost imperial reception, whose encouraging echoes reached across the ocean to Ireland.

William Redmond has been in Boston on many occasions since then. His last visit to this city brought with it a most melancholy duty. During his stay Mayor Collins died. At his funeral, William Redmond acted as one of the pallbearers, both as a bereaved friend and as official representative of the Irish Parliamentary party.

There will be no ring of sadness in William Redmond's voice as he faces his next Boston audience in October. His message this time will be one of cheer and of coming victory.

He has spoken all around the world when his tones could be none but those of bitterness and of mourning. He is coming at last with a story of hope and of progress from a land that has known neither for some gloomy centuries. Boston will be glad to hear his words.

Pius Nears Ninth Anniversary as Pope

Somewhat Weakened, Pontiff's Physician Orders Temporary Cessation of Private Audiences.

ROME, July 27.—On August 4 will occur the ninth anniversary of the accession of Pope Pius X. to the chair of Peter, as [illegible] successor of Pope Leo XIII, who died July 20, 1903.

Cardinal Sarto, at [illegible] of Venice, was elected Pope by the conclave which assembled immediately after Leo had passed away.

His Holiness was born on June 2, 1835. The latest reports from the Vatican say that although the great heat distresses and somewhat weakens him, the chief prelate of the Catholic church feels able to attend to his daily duties with his Secretary of State, Cardinal Del Val.

However, to decrease as much as possible all strain of fatigue for the Pontiff his physician has ordered a temporary cessation of private audiences. These will be resumed when the weather is cooler.

IRISH CLUBS READY FOR MOONLIGHT TRIP

Big Crowd Expected at Kilkenny Club's August Outing in Rugby Park.

Two big events are scheduled for today in Irish county club circles. The first will be the reunion and family gathering of the Dublin Association at Rugby Park, Mattapan. The other will be a moonlight union excursion of the Cavan, Leitrim and Longford Associations on the steamer King Philip from Commercial wharf at 7.30 p. m. For the Dublin reunion the committee has prepared an excellent program to include plenty of music and speech making by a number of prominent speakers. Cars may be taken at Ashland street, Mattapan. President Patrick J. Drumgoole is chairman of the reception committee. Associated with him are John F. Donohue of Cavan, James Rogan of Leitrim and Thomas Clark of Longford, the presidents of the three clubs that are having the excursion.

The Monaghan Association will resume its meetings in Wells Memorial Hall on Sunday evening, September 1. President Hogan will initiate a large class that evening.

Everybody had a good time at the outing of the Mayo Men's Benevolent Association in Clinton. The members of division 8, A. O. H., of Clinton, placed their commodious hall at the disposal of the club. An excellent dinner was furnished and afterward a fine literary and musical program was enjoyed.

The Mayo Men will meet next Sunday afternoon in Friendship Hall, No. 12 Kneeland street, when Austin Needham, the newly elected treasurer, will be installed by President Joseph M. Thornton.

Tickets for the annual outing of the Kilkenny Men's Association to be held at Rugby Park, Mattapan, on August 18, are in great demand. The Summer outing and the ball in the Winter serve as reunions for all former residents of Kilkenny and are looked forward to with much pleasure.

Several new members will be added to the roster of the Carlow Association at the meeting in Appleton Hall this evening. Plans will be discussed for the Fall and Winter social. There will also be instrumental music with addresses by visiting [illegible].

The members of the Donegal Association are pleased with their new and commodious quarters in Owls' Hall, Main street, Charlestown. The meetings in the future will be held on the first and third Sunday afternoons of each month.

Among the associations that have made marked progress during the past six months are the Wexford, Kildare, Fermanagh, Louth, Meath and Wicklow clubs. Each meeting witnesses a number of initiations. The officers of the above societies cordially invite all former residents of their respective counties to be present.

Owing to the big success of the recent Central Council ball, the delegates voted to repeat the affair and appointed a subcommittee to secure the hall. President John F. Clancy of the Central Council will appoint the several committees.

* * *

The Kilkenny, Roscommon, Donegal, Galway and Kerry Ladies' associations will open the social season early in October with a series of dancing parties.

Priests Go on Vacation Tour.

Rev. Fr. Carney of Melrose, Rev. Fr. Butler of Everett and Rev. Fr. Ring of Dorchester are going on a three weeks' trip which will include the great lakes, Chicago, Montreal and New York, and a visit to the Catholic Summer school at Cliff Haven, near Plattsburg, N. Y.

Rector as Chief Guest.

Rev. Howland J. Harkens and a parish committee of St. Joseph's Church, Amesbury, are in charge of plans for a garden party to be held next Wednesday on the church grounds. Rev. Fr. Lee, rector of the parish, will be guest of honor.

A "County Fair" for Melrose.

Members of Melrose Council, K. of C., and their lady friends are preparing for a "county fair" to be held next Saturday afternoon and evening.

SOUTH END LAWN PARTY FOR CHURCH

St. Philip's Association, an organization of St. Philip's Church on Harrison avenue, held a largely attended lawn party yesterday on the grounds of the Commonwealth Motor Club in Watertown.

The object of the party was to raise funds for the completion of the church. Work on the upper interior is progressing rapidly. When completed the edifice will be one of the most beautiful temples of worship in Boston.

Committee on Grounds—Rev. W. H. O'Connell, P. G. Flanerty and William T. Norton.

Committee on Refreshments—Rev. R. F. Teeling, Mrs. William Cousens, Mrs. John Cassidy, Mrs. Stephen Higgins, Mrs. John Costello, Miss Jennie McGee, Miss Elizabeth McHendrick, Miss Maude Sydie, Miss Addie Norton, Miss Margaret Marshall, Miss Margaret McManus, Miss Margaret Leahy.

Mrs. Cousens was in charge of the parish table, Mrs. Higgins the Holy Name Society table, Mrs. Costello the Married Ladies Sodality table and Miss McGee, organist of the parish, the choir table.

Committee on Dancing—Leo Delaney, James Connors, Austin Fraley.

Committee on printing and publicity, John J. Buckley and Leo Delaney.

Courts to Take New Members.

Three courts of the M. C. O. F. will initiate new members this week, St. Mary Court of Randolph, P. A. Collins Court of Allston, and Fr. Conway Court of Salem.

SOCIAL AND LEGAL VIEWS OF THE CHILD

At the National Conference of Catholic Charities to be held in Washington, D. C., September 22-25, the speakers will treat of varied aspects of the child problem and other vital social questions. The leading debaters and topics will be:

"The Legal Aspect of the Problem of Dependent Children," Judge Michael F. Girten of Chicago.

"Present Methods in the Care and Training of Mentally and Physically Defective Children, Deaf, Mute, Blind and Feeble-minded," Father McCarthy of New York.

"Medical Point of View of Physically and Mentally Defective Children," Dr. Helen Porter of Chicago.

"The Emigrant Child," Mrs. Edward Mandel of New York.

"The Placing Out of Children: With Reference to Those Which Should and Should Not be Placed Out," William J. Doherty of New York.

"The Education of the Dependent Child," Rev. Brother Henry of New York.

"The Problem of Dependent Catholic Children in Non-Catholic Institutions, in Public Institutions, and in States Where There Are No Catholic Institutions for Their Care," Rev. Francis X. Wastl of Philadelphia.

"Modern Views and Methods in the Treatment of Inebriety," Dr. John A. Horgan of Boston.

"Our Catholic Immigration," William J. Vavra of Chicago.

Other topics will be: "Desertion and Non-support," "The State in Relation to the Convict's Family," "The Parish Nurse," "Recreation and Play Among the Poor," "Compulsory Education and Child Labor."

BIG REUNION OF A.O.H. ON NEXT LABOR DAY

Hampden County Divisions Preparing Hospitable Reception for Delegates.

Nearly every division president responded to the call issued by Secretary William T. Gleaning to meet at Hibernian Hall, E street, South Boston, Friday evening, for the purpose of perfecting arrangements for the big reunion of past and present members of the A. O. H. [illegible] at [illegible] grounds on Labor Day.

County President Richard Dwyer presided. Ten thousand tickets were distributed. The convention voted to issue a handsome souvenir which will contain the portraits of a number of prominent members and interesting data pertaining to the organization.

The delegates voted that 25 per cent were to be given to each division for tickets sold and 40 per cent of the souvenir proceeds.

It was announced that four of the best football teams in New England would play that day as well as two strong hurling [illegible]. Other field events will include shot put, running and jumping. Special features [illegible] provided for the ladies and children.

Auxiliary 5 of Roxbury will open the social season with a whist party and dance at Odd Fellows Hall, No. 8 Warren street, early in September.

Massachusetts members are well pleased at the unanimous re-election of National President James J. Regan of St. Paul. Mr. Regan has devoted a great deal of time and effort to localities where a national officer was seldom seen before his time. As a result the A. O. H. has developed greatly in districts where hitherto it was poorly organized.

* * *

Special attention will be paid to the organizing of juvenile divisions, and Hibernian cadets during the next year. Connecticut leads in this respect at present, having over fifty companies.

County Vice-President Fred J. McLaughlin of Suffolk County, has announced his candidacy for the office of county president. Mr McLaughlin has been a member of Division 15 of Jamaica Plain for many years and served as vice president before promotion to the office of president, in which chair he has served three years.

SUNDAY AMERICAN'S SPECIAL CABLE LETTERS FROM THE CAPITALS OF EUROPE

GERMAN WAR SPECTRE COSTS GREAT BRITAIN $350,000,000 WHILE THOUSANDS GO HUNGRY

Winston Churchill's Revelations of England's Vulnerability Startles the Nation—No End, Apparently, to the Cuthtroat Policy of the Two Great Powers.

By JOHN L. EDDY.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, July 27.—Winston Churchill's speech as First Lord of the Admiralty, in submitting the supplementary naval estimates to the House of Commons, has startled England from complacent sense of security, even more violently than when during the Moroccan crisis last year the news leaked out that the British fleet authorities had suspended leaves of absence and had steam up ready to strike.

Enough time has now elapsed since the Churchill speech was delivered to enable a thoroughly accurate estimate to be made of its effect on public opinion.

The first effect, undoubtedly, was a shock at the realization of the fact that in two years Britain will have in the North Sea only thirty-three battleships fully manned and in full commission to offset twenty-nine similar German ships. This is a margin of only four ships to protect the vulnerable British coast and guarantee safety to British commerce and is all that will remain of the much vaunted historic formula of "Two British keels to the enemies' one," which England has maintained for a century and a half against her strongest Continental rival.

The second effect, naturally, has been to intensify the demand for more ships, more men, without further parley or delay. In fact, practically the only criticism of the government's plan to build more ships than were provided for in the regular budget are directed against its inadequacy.

"The government doesn't go far enough; we want ships and the First Lord of the Admiralty is only giving us words," is the burden of complaint.

ENGLAND'S AWFUL NAVAL BURDEN.

This complaint is not entirely justified. Mr. Churchill's new bill provided for the laying down of five battleships, next year, instead of three as originally intended, and for four new battleships every year thereafter. It involves an increase of four million nine hundred and fifty thousand dollars in this year's naval estimate and an additional outlay of ten million dollars next year.

Great Britain's naval expenditure in 1911 was eighty-seven million, eight hundred thousand dollars. This one additional item will provide an increase of about eleven percent—an awful burden for naval armaments that has to be borne by the already underfed and tax-harrassed working population of the world's greatest empire.

Where it can all end is one of those mysteries which only time and Divine Providence can solve.

For sure there is no end now in sight. It is a game of poker with human beings as the chips. England feels bound to raise every German bet and Germany, believing that she holds four aces, refuses to be bluffed. There are many observers, including the writer, who have had a chance to talk with well informed and influential people in both the countries involved, who believe the inevitable end is war.

England, of course, keeps up the historic pretence that she is building battleships for the benevolent purpose of preserving the world's peace. Arthur J. Balfour expressed this idea in characteristic national fashion when replying to Mr. Churchill's speech. He said:

> Though we groan under the magnitude of this expenditure, though we must look forward with little less than dismay to the burden which is now twelve million pounds sterling more than it was when the present government came into office, I can see that the estimates are going largely to increase whatever government is in power. They are going to increase and they must increase as long as the insane competition in shipbuilding goes on. We at all events have this consolation—we do not build for ambition; we build for peace and security (loud cheers), and so long as we build for peace and security so long shall we have behind us the opinion of the great dominions of all the smaller states in Europe and that of the enlightened bulk of mankind.

If there is any adequate answer to this national assumption that the peace and security of the world have been intrusted by divine power into British hands that answer is now being prepared in Germany.

Germany Always Ready.

How thoroughly it is being prepared was well shown by Mr. Churchill himself when he said:

> Taking a general view of the effects of the new German naval law, nearly four-fifths of the entire German navy will be maintained in full permanent equipment instantly and constantly ready for war. Such a proportion is remarkable, and so far as I am aware, unexampled in the previous practice of any modern naval power.

This new move on Germany's part merely applies to her navy and is the same principle that she has already adopted in her army. With characteristic thoroughness, she has elaborated a new scientific scheme for the quickest possible transition from conditions of peace to those of hostilities. Every German officer has his secret orders instructing him what to do in case of war; every German soldier and reservist knows to whom and where he is to report under similar conditions; every railroad employe is in the service of the government and knows exactly what he is to do when war comes; every locomotive and every car belongs to the government, and is numbered and marked ready for instantaneous service in accordance with military charts providing for immediate mobilization upon the frontier.

This scientific clock-like scheme for surprising and overwhelming an enemy which has been carefully worked out by the Teutonic minds in the German war offices is now being applied to the German fleet. In the future, within 300 miles of the British Isles all the most effective ships of the German navy—battleships, cruisers, torpedo crafts and so forth—will be held on the leash, manned, stored, victualled and incessently trained.

> The German fleet as now planned will be superior in fighting strength and more instantly ready for aggression or defence than the fleet of any power in the past.

The far-reaching effects of Germany's action in establishing her fleet on a war basis in the time of peace can hardly be estimated. Austria is preparing a similar action and for a further increase in naval armament, which, in its turn, will force England to make increases in her Mediterranean force similar to those she is now making in the North Sea.

Italy is already on a war footing and building more ships to keep pace with Austria.

France must join the procession.

In a final analysis, of course, the terrific cost of all this scientific preparation to shed the blood of their fellow men must come from the pockets of the already over-burdened and discontented European workers.

Germany spent two hundred and seventy-one million dollars upon her army and navy in 1911. Great Britain spent three hundred and twenty-two million dollars in the same period.

The increases now planned will raise Germany's expenditures to well over three hundred million dollars and Great Britain's to over three hundred and fifty million dollars.

British consols fell below 74 upon the publication of Churchill's speech, making thereby a new low record and establishing a decline of over fifteen points since January, 1906. German 3s at the same time fell below 80, a loss of nine points in the same period.

England is reaching the limit of her power to build ships out of her revenue, and already there is talk of borrowing to keep up with Germany's deadly pace. What will the end be.

The Three Solutions of the Problem.

There are only three possible solutions:

First—An agreement with Germany for the limitation of armaments. This is pronounced inpracticable by Germans, who refuse to bind themselves to a limitation that would place them in a hopeless position of permanent inferiority.

Second—Revolution, with a risse to power of the Socialists, who would do away with armies and navies.

Third—As England will never consent to a limitation or armaments which will give Germany equal strength with her own, as Germany will never consent to a limitation that will leave her in the place of permanent inferiority, the solution of the problem appears to rest between the last two named possibilities—namely, revolutions and war.

Meanwhile events are rapidly approaching a crisis in London.

The hunger-stricken dockhand strikers are now so incited by the seditious speeches of their leaders that the police and military authorities fear an extensive outbreak of violence by the march of a hundred thousand men from the East End to the West End on a wrecking expedition.

Thousands of police are now held in reserve, and precautions are adopted for the protection of the residences of Cabinet ministers and Lord Devonport. The strikers are rendered increasingly desperate by the failure of all efforts to secure mediation as well as by the spectacle of our hundred thousand women and children in the throes of starvation.

For nine weeks now the strike has continued, with the employers, headed by Lord Devonport, still stadfastly refusing to discuss terms for resumption until the men first return to work. The strikers decline until the terms of increased wages and shorter hours are conceded. Meanwhile starvation and misery in dockland have reached a terrible position. Children are dying by hundreds owing to lack of sustenance.

Miss Morgan in Missionary Role

By PAUL PIERRE RIGNAUX.

Special cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, July 27.—Miss Anne Morgan, daughter of J. Pierpont Morgan, has suspended her artistic receptions. She, Miss Marbury and Miss Elsie DeWolfe have made a feature of the foreign season at Royal Versailles for several years.

Miss Morgan has retired, so to speak, in order to open a campaign of Christianity at Montmartre. Last Sunday evening she delivered the opening sermon of her mission under the auspices of British-American Young Woman's Christian Association. This organization was founded by Mrs. Whitney Hoff, the Paris representative of the Standard Oil Company in the Rue Ballu, far up the heights of the unholy mount.

Where Miss Morgan preached is within a stone's throw of the Rat Mort, the Moulin Rouge, the Abby and the optical illusion, known as Heaven, Hell and Pergatory. It is not positively stated that she means to convert the habitues of these places from the error of their ways, but it is known that she draws people away from them.

Obviously, Miss Morgan prefers to preach the gospel to the lowly than to give small talk which is the aim of Prince Kargeorgewitch, Count Boni de Castellane and other society people, who made up the artistic receptions at Versailles. Mrs. Whitney Hoff came up from her chateau on the banks of the Loire to hear Miss Morgan's initial effort to convert Montmartre to Christianity and clean living.

Americans and Frenchmen are following the revival with the keenest interest. Titled ones, who go hot in pursuit of a great heiress, fear that a wealthy wife is being lost in an ardent Christian philanthropist and missionary.

Police Unearth New Suffragette Plots

One of Them Said to Embrace a Tragic Proposal to Stab the Premier.

LONDON, July 27.—The London police are making some astounding discoveries in their efforts to trace the leaders in the latest series of outrages by the militant suffragettes.

It has now been definitely proved that a young woman was appointed to stab Mr. Asquith at the Liberal reception, which was so suddenly and mysteriously cancelled. Both Mr. Asquith and Mr. McKenna are being far more closely guarded. A few weeks ago the police authorities were inclined to drop their search for Miss Christabel Pankhurst, but recent attempted outrages leave no room for doubt that somewhere in London Miss Christabel is directing operations, although at the headquarters of the Women's Social and Political Union the pretense is made that the "furies" are acting entirely on their own initiative.

Cabinet ministers are now thoroughly anxious, not about their own lives, but about those of their families. Winston Churchill's babies are never left alone for more than a moment, and detectives follow the children when they are taken out for an airing.

The search for Miss Christabel is now to be undertaken seriously, as during the past few days important information has been secured by Scotland Yard.

Waldorf Astors Mend Political Fences

By CHESTER OVERTON.

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, July 27.—Mrs. Waldorf Astor entertained on a large scale today at Clievedon, the beautiful estate on the Thames which W. W. Astor presented to his son on his marriage. More than six hundred guests, all constituents of Waldorf Astor, came all the way from Plymouth in special trains to Twyford, where they were met by automobiles, cabs, carriages and brakes and driven to Clievedon.

The guests were entertained from early morning until late in the evening and most of them returned exhausted to Playmouth.

During the week Mrs. Astor had already entertained at her charming house at Plymouth a large number of the members of the Primrose League and also all the workers who have assisted to get Mr. Astor into Parliament.

There is reason for all this burst of entertaining, for although the Astors are immensely popular at Plymouth, there has been some friction on the tuberculosis committee which compelled Mr. Astor to resign his seat. Some of his constituents suspect him of flirting with the Radical party and others suspect that Mr. Astor is making for the House of Lords.

Asks $25,000 Before Marrying Spinster

Marquis of Hertford Also Wants Large Allowance if He Weds Aged Miss Cockle.

LONDON, July 27.—As was announced some time ago, the Marquis of Hertford, better remembered as the Earl of Yarmouth, is negotiating a marriage with Miss Cockle, a very wealthy woman about seventy years of age, and a member of the Cockle faily of pill fame.

The two persons who are arranging this strange match are Lady Fairbairn, whose position in society is that of a professional chaperone and wh owas mixed up in the recent Royal Enclosure scandal at Ascot, and Reginald Newton, son of Arthur Newton, who defended the murderer Crippen.

Lord Hertford is making as one of the conditions of his marriage to the old lady that she shall at once put down $25,000 to pay off his bankruptcy debts. After that he will require a large and regular allowance. The "Pill Queen" is genuinely attracted to Hertford.

Blames Americans for High Living Cost

Paris Paper Says Visitors Pay Exorbitant Prices and These Charges React.

PARIS, July 27.—Paris Sports, the organ of the French Jockey Club and mouthpiece of the wealthy, publishes a scathing article today on the high cost of living and places the blame squarely on the shoulders of American visitors. It says:

"People are constantly seeking the causes of the ever increasing cost of living. The primary cause is the American invasion. The American thinks in dollars; a dollar to him is the same as when we spend one franc. Hence he finds living cheap in France.

"When the hotel keepers ask a figure for his rooms as high as the temperature in the dog days the American answers: 'All right.' This happens even when the hotels are almost empty. Hotels are like the trans-Atlantic steamers—they are always full at the desk office.

"But why complain? Does not this river of American gold remain in France? Yes, but it goes to the hotel keeper, to luxuriant restaurants and fashionable dressmakers and the high prices charged by them react upon all the tradespeople, who also charge accordingly.

"We are not attacking the hotelkeepers and restauranteurs, we are merely pointing out that their exorbitant prices raise the cost down along the line.

QUEEN RECEIVES DUCHESS.

Mary Has Long Chat With Consuelo; Duke Not Invited.

LONDON, July 27.—For the third successive week the Duchess of Marlborough has been invited, but this time without her husband, to meet the King and Queen. The occasion was a dinner given by Lord and Lady Allendale at their big house in Piccadilly. It was noticed that Queen Mary spent a long time chatting with the Duchess after dinner.

The Duchess wore a gown of silver and white English brocade and an all-around crown of diamonds. Nearly all the women present wore English brocades as a compliment to the Queen, who has done everything in her power to revive home industries.

Her Mother Was a Great Friend of the Late King Edward VII.

LONDON, July 27.—Society finds it difficult to realize that Mrs. George Keppel has a grown-up daughter to chaperon. But the appearance of the famous and witty Mrs. Keppel, noted beauty and friend of the late King Edward, and her charming daughter at the smartest functions, make people admit that time really flies. It seems only yesterday to society that Mrs. Keppel was the centre of the inner exclusive circle, the foremost in the public eye and one of the most picturesque figures in society.

But the daughter and the grey tint of the mother's beautiful hair testify indisputably that years are passing. Meanwhile the daughter is entering society most auspiciously. She was the central figure at the brilliant ball her mother gave earlier in the season. It was noticed that Mrs. Keppel secured for her ball the attendance of a large number of desirable men who will seldom give the time or trouble to purely society gatherings. Mrs. Keppel is a sister of Sir William Edmonstone, Bart.

ARTIST AN INVENTOR.

New Yorker in Paris Solves Tire Problem in Autos.

PARIS, July 27.—H. Humphry Moore, who was born in New York sixty-one years ago and has lived in Paris about four decades, is following in the footsteps of Robert Fulton and Robert Finley Breese Morse, both of whom were artists first and inventors afterwards.

Moore is a deaf and dumb artist, whose portraits, particularly of young girls, are the admiration and attraction of artistic visitors to his studio, and whose Japanese collection is one of the joys of Paris. This painter has invented a new type of wheel, which solves the problem of the tire for all wheeled vehicles, but its greatest field of action and operation will be in connection with automobiles.

Mrs. Alkins in "Merry Widow."

PARIS, July 27.—Another American engaged to amuse Parisians and provincials during the warm season is Mrs. Bella Alkins of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York. Mrs. Alkins has begun here at the Chic Apollo Theatre in "The Merry Widow."

Englishwomen Favor Simplicity in Linen

LONDON, July 27.—Now that the London season is practically over, society women are coming out in gowns usually worn at the seaside and there is a craze for simple brown Holland trimmed with a ribbed white pique.

Mrs. George Cornwallis-West appeared a day or two ago at the Shakespeare's England exhibition in one of these very simple gowns, which have to be extremely well cut to look well. It was carried out in the one-piece style, and the mauve skirt was only broken by a [illegible] of seaming. Thus there was a tablier with a stitched edge in the front and at the back, the sides just over the hips fitting smoothly while the rest of the side pieces were spliced upon this foundation, making one horizontal line. This broke the skirt, which might otherwise have given too much length to the figure of the wearer. The corsage had a kimono-shaped top, but this was also spliced upon a rather full breadth which covers the bust and was gathered into a slightly high waist, which was finished with a narrow varnished belt. The sleeves showed the same seaming, and the whole costume was finished off with a turned-down collar and cuffs of white ribbed pique and a white cravat with hanging ends.

For those who like color the same model would be equally successful in bright butcher blue or soft rose pink linen, while it could also be carried out in a deep ochre color, which is a favorite tone for seaside wear this year.

PLANS OF THE REIDS.

Expected Ambassador Will Continue at Dorchester House.

LONDON, July 27.—Although nothing is yet definitely settled, it is rumored that the American Ambassador and Mrs. Reid will stay on at Dorchester House off and on until next March. The Reids wind up a brilliant season with a second large dinner and ball and this was in the nature of a farewell so far as big entertainments are concerned.

Their daughter, the [illegible] John Ward, is expected to cont[illegible] Dudley House next season, the family [illegible] for sumptuous entertainments.

CARUSO TO MARRY RICH WOMAN WHOM HE LOVED AS CHILD

Latest Romance in Which He Wins Argentina Beauty by Sheer Persistence.

WEARS WONDERFUL RUBY

Bride-to-Be a Widow, Left Big Estates When Her Husband Died.

PARIS, July 27.—Caruso has at last won by sheer persistency in his most recent love affair. Madame Ving Velasquez, the daughter of Monsieur de Taz, a wealthy Argentine, who, dying, recently left her with numerous estates, but no means to maintain them, has at last become betrothed to the famous tenor and is wearing a wonderful ruby, set in diamonds, making a ring which binds the bargain.

This really seems to be the greatest romance in Caruso's romantic life. He was a great friend of her father and watched the girl grow to womanhood, to find the love for the child develop into a passion for the woman. For the past year and specially since the father's death, which left her in such embarrassing circumstances, Caruso has laid siege to Madame Velasquez's heart, bombarding it daily with bunches of orchids and presents of all kinds. But Madame Velasquez was adament, and her highly sensitive and artistic nature expressed itself to friends when she told them that she could never bring herself to "marry a butcher, even if he were the world's greatest tenor."

"You'll Love Me Some Day."

But Caruso never despaired and told her he knew she would love him some day. When he was out of Paris floods of telegrams and continual bunches of orchids poured into her house, No. 14 Avenue de la Grand Arnee, reminding her constantly of the tenor's devotion. So strong was the siege that Madame Velasques has, at last, her endurance tried to the limit has been forced to surrender.

One of the first things the newly-engaged couple did was to have a photograph taken in the most loving attitude. Then Madame Velasquez went to Italy, leaving Caruso here to sign important contracts from South America, and although these contracts involve the sum of $84,000—he is to get $7,000 for each night he appears in Buenos Ayres—yet the managers could scarcely persuade Caruso to remain in Paris long enough to sign the papers, so anxious was he to get to his betrothed.

$4,000 for Two Songs.

Before going to South America Caruso will sing at Ostend, where he gets $4,000 a night for just two songs. Mme. Valesquez must be called rather stout and has a peculiar type of Spanish beauty, pleasing but not extraordinary.

In order to obtain what is justly her right, she has instituted proceedings against her father's estate. She says she will never marry Caruso until she is absolutely independent financially, as she would never be content living off any man's bounty. Mme. Valesquez is very musical and sings well.

No definite date has been set for the wedding, as Mme. Valesquez desires a settlement of the case against her father's estate before marrying. It is said the family appreciates the omission of Mme. Valesquez's name in the will as merely an oversight and will compromise the matter with her.

FRUGAL ABERDEENS.

Invitations to Vice-Regal Dreaded by Those With Appetites.

LONDON, July 27.—Everyone here is talking of the contrast offered by the entertainments given by the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen and Lord and Lady Iveagh in connection with the Trinity College celebrations.

Lord Iveagh, who is head of the great firm of the Guiness Brewers, gave a large garden party at Farnleigh, his place near Dublin, and as usual the guests were provided with a sumptuous repast of peaches, strawberries and all kinds of dainty dishes.

The Aberdeens, who gave a garden party at the Vice-Regal Lodge, offered their guests gooseberries. Unfortunately it was impossible to see how the guests disposed of the skins, as nobody ate the gooseberries. Invitations to the Vice-Regal Lodge are so dreaded by people with normal appetites that only those who have political reasons accept them.

PERSIAN WINS AMERICAN

Newark Girl Engaged to General Afchar in Paris.

PARIS, July 27.—When Ida and Martha Phillips, daughters of Alonzo J. Phillips of Newark, N. J., came to Paris to fulfill an engagement at one of the open air music halls in the Champs Elysees, they and their mother, who accompanied them, little thought the trip to Paris would bring to one of the girls a gallant husband of a noble Parisian family. The girls are billed conspicuously as "The Two American Beauties." One of the nightly visitors to the Alcazar was General Sallunes Afchar, chief of infantry in Persia. He became enamoured of Ida and after forty days of arduous suit came to the mother to ask for her hand. Mrs. Phillips at first refused but the pressure of the daughters and assurances on every side of the high standing of the General caused her to consent.

NANCE O'NEIL IN 75-CENT SHOW IS FILLING CASH BOX

First Big Star to Abandon $2 Role for the More Popular Prices.

PUBLIC IS THE GAINER

Three Houses Show How to Make Theatres Pay in Summer Time.

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

IT is a far cry from $2 road productions to seventy-five-cent stock offerings, but we have become accustomed to so many unusual things in the modern drama that such a drop ordinarily calls for little more than passing comment.

In the case of Miss Nance O'Neil, the Belasco star, who is mixing her two-dollar acting with the seventy-five-cent brand supplied at the Majestic Theatre, it appears that she has accomplished more than merely supplying a topic for comment. She has started a flow of good and handsome dollars into the box office, which may also account for the new and expansive smile that Lindsay Morison is wearing this week.

Manager Morison has a soft, persuasive voice which he uses when coaxing actorfolk into his dramatic family, and it must have been in exceptionally good working order the morning he approached Miss O'Neil. At any rate, the combination of Miss O'Neil and her solemn plays have put the Majestic emphatically upon the Summer theatrical map, and Mr. Morison may take all the credit to himself, for it was his own idea.

Bears Belasco Brand.

Miss O'Neil is not the first dyed-in-the-wool star to forsake the two-dollar river for the seventy-five-cent stream, but she occupies perhaps a more prominent position in stardom than any of her predecessors. Moreover, she is stamped with the Belasco managerial brand, and those in the past so favored have deigned only to rise from the seventy-five-cent offerings to the two-dollar variety.

It is safe to say that Miss O'Neil's drop in price will not detract from the lustre of her position as a star, and it may, incidentally, start a movement to make it possible for the erstwhile two-dollar artists to be seen at popular prices. In this the public would be the gainer.

Miss O'Neil seems to revel in her new environment, despite the ominous predictions that the two-a-day routine would prove a real hardship. One thing is certain, and that is that her work has not suffered any by the change. If anything, it has improved, for she has been forced to greater exertions by the lack of time for rehearsals, and the necessity of accustoming herself to supporting players whose ways are not only unfamiliar, but whose long stock experience has temporarily unfitted them for the sort of production Miss O'Neil knows.

And this does not mean any reflection on the ability of the members of Mr. Morison's company.

Miss O'Neil is a trifle sensitive on the question of dropping from the two-dollar price to seventy-five cents. She maintains, and rightfully, too, that a production should always be judged by its quality and not by the price at which it is offered to the public. "I don't really see," she says, "why there should be so much talk about my appearing at popular prices. I am, of course, much gratified by the many evidences of appreciation which the Boston public has shown me, but I should rather this appreciation be of my work, and not of the fact that I am offering my productions at popular prices.

Doesn't Worry Over Price.

"While on the road with my own productions the question of what admission should be charged has never concerned me. If I were playing for charity I should endeavor to bring the same energy and care to my work that I would if I were playing before a millionaire audience. Art and money never did seem to mix well, and I don't think the time will ever come when they will. If it does, art will be merged and money will rule. Of course the box office is the index toward which the eye of the manager is constantly directed, but it should be the last thing to attract the attention of the artist.

"It is not a new experience for me to play in a stock company, for it was in that line of dramatic work that I gained the real foundation experience of my career. But it is the first time, as you say, that I have played in stock at popular prices. How I detest those two words. It is proving a very wholesome diversion for me, despite the fact that it means real work and plenty of it. Rehearsing in the morning and playing every afternoon and evening may sound easy, but it is not I can assure you. But it makes all the difference in the world if the work is agreeable—and it surely is in my case.

Likes Old Boston.

"As long as fate directed that I should play two-a-day stock, I am grateful that Boston is the city to witness my first endeavors in this direction. I have a warm spot and a large one in my heart for Boston. In the early days Boston was the first city in the East to put the stamp of approval on my work, and since then the sincere appreciation of the Boston public has proven a veritable inspiration to me when in distant parts.

"Since opening here with Mr. Morison, I have had every reason to enthuse over the hearty welcome which has been accorded me. And right here I wish to say that there is no more discriminating audience in the whole world than one will find in Boston. They seem to get the finer points of a play. They applaud at the right time, and keep silent at the right time. And silence to the artist is golden. I would rather have intense stillness during my scenes, than to be accorded the most tumultuous applause at the close of the scene."

Making theatres pay in Summer is a problem that appears to have been solved by at least three of the downtown houses. The lobby of the Boston is used for the display of women's dresses, the Gaiety Theatre lobby is the headquarters for a sale of rain coats, and the Park Theatre lobby is the distributing centre for a small novelty, which is eloquently offered by a young man with an accent straight from the highlands of Scotland.

It is said that one of the first victims of the Park Theatre novelty sale was W. D. Andreas, manager of the house when the drama is at its height. This has been denied—not by Mr. Andreas, but by friends who declare that his natural inclination to conservatism in the matter of making purchases would ever lead him into such reckless extravagances as spending 25 cents on any article of so doubtful value as a combination reading glass, compass, telescope and opera glass. As a landlord, keenly interested in collecting his rent, Mr. Andreas may attend a few of the sales—but as a purchaser—well, hardly.

The drama is acquiring a few ideas from organized baseball. If you can believe the reports from New York, they are selling actors just as the magnates in baseball dispose of their players. For the modest sum of $25,000—not stage money—Charles Dillingham has turned Eddie Foy over to Werba & Luscher. This is the first time in theatrical history that managers have bartered and traded in actors. Mr. Foy is satisfied with the deal—he says it is a compliment to have had a face value of $25,000 put on his services. If Werba & Luscher are in the market for actors, I know a lot of pretty fair samples, slightly shopworn but still in working condition, that may be bought cheap.

WHO is the funniest woman on the American stage? Many theatregoers will reply, "Kate Elinore." As a member of the Elinore Sisters, and later as the cook in "Dick Whittington" and in "Naughty Marietta," Miss Elinore has made a name for herself, second to no comedienne on the present-day stage. Off the stage Kate Elinore bears little resemblance to "The Human Billiken," so familiar to theatregoers. Yet by ludicrous makeups and weird and wonderful comedy costumes, Miss Elinore can so alter her appearance that her closest friends would scarcely recognize her.

No one who saw "Dick Whittington" can ever forget Kate Elinore and her "Salome" costume made of tin cans and fish netting. Miss Elinore and Sam Williams will produce a new act for the first time on any stage at Keith's Theatre this week, entitled "The Hunter and the Hunteress."

Like all their previous vehicles, it is the work of Miss Elinore. She writes all her own material, and like most successful artistes, can fit her own mannerisms better than anyone else could possibly do.

IT is not often that one hears of a press agent trying his hand as an actor, as they are usually totally unsuited for anything of the sort. The other day Jay Benton, the representative of the Charles Frohman, Rich & Harris theatres in this city, was in Canso, N. S., for his Summer vacation. H. Price Webber and his Boston comedy company were playing there, and when it came the evening for "Rip Van Winkle" one of the actors was taken sick. In the emergency Mr. Webber suggested to the Boston man that he go on in the character of Heinrich Hudson in place of the regular man. The principal thing to do was to learn a song and go over the pantomime scene with Rip, and so the Boston man consented. He had a little rehearsal before the play began, and when the time came he donned the long red robe and domino and played without losing a cue. However, he said when it was all over that he thought that it was much easier to make balloon trips than to try being an actor.

Amusement Notes.

It looks like a prosperous season at the Gaiety Theatre, which opens on Monday, August 19. The list of attractions booked for the coming year is easily the best in the history of this house. "The Cracker Jacks," which opens, is followed by some of the most notable of the burlesque shows on the road.

• • •

In "The Quaker Girl," which will open the season at the Colonial Theatre on Labor Day, will be seen several of the players who were in "The Arcadians" in the famous runs of that musical comedy here. Percival Knight plays the leading character.

• • •

Among the attractions booked for early appearance at B. F. Keith's Theatre are John Tiller's Twelve Sunshine Girlies and Six Eton Boys in a big dancing act, a spectacular novelty, entitled "Over the Wall," and the Ergotti Lilliputians.

PARKS, THEATRES AND EXCURSIONS

Majestic Theatre.

In response to numerous requests for a presentation of "Leah The Forsaken," Lindsay Morison has decided upon it as the vehicle for Miss Nance O'Neil and his stock company at the Majestic Theatre this week. The play is an adaptation of the old and familiar German play "Deborah," and is one in which Miss O'Neil has made a success.

"Leah The Forsaken" would be a great play if there was little else to it besides the great curse scene. It is in this scene that Leah, driven to desperation by the persecutions she has endured, bursts forth into a powerful denunciation of the lover who has proven faithless.

In Miss O'Neil's support the members of Mr. Morisons company have already measured up pretty well to the standard set by the star.

B. F. Keith's Theatre.

Kate Elinore, the Human Billiken, as she is known, and one of the most original and funniest comediennes on the American stage, comes to B. F. Keith's Theatre this week. Miss Elinore will present for the first time "The Hunter and the Hunteress," assisted by Sam Williams.

Aside from the interest attached to Miss Elinore, the week will also be notable for the appearance of the Four Regals, the German muscular marvels, in "The Armorers." Another act will be the debut of Halligan and Sykes, a pretty girl and a natural born comedian. Adonis and his posing dog is a pretty novelty bound to appeal to the children, and other features will be Armstrong and Lawrence in a musical skit; Lavine-Cimaron trio in a grotesque comedy act; Grace Edmond, a singing comedienne, and Shreck and Percival, acrobatic tumblers.

Paragon Park.

The popular fad with automobile tourists this Summer seems to be making a tour of the Cabaret shows. Nearly every Summer resort now has its Cabaret since Manager Dodge started the ball rolling in the Palm Garden at Paragon, Nantasket.

So great has been the hit made by May Yohe the past week that she has been secured for another week, which will positively be the last. She will continue to make two appearances each evening, at 9:15 and 10:20. The early appearance will be in ample time for patrons to take the late boat back to Boston after her performance is over. The three Gilden sisters, the Parisian gliders and chansonettes, have also made a most favorable impression the past week and will be retained in the Cabaret for one week more.

Norumbega Park.

The daily attendances at delightful Norumbega continue to the high water mark. In the open air theatre this week an exceptionally strong vaudeville program is offered. The most notable feature is a European importation, the Van Noss troupe of gymnasts. Their act is promised as entirely different from anything in this line ever seen on the American stage. Another big feature will be Marjie Bennett and her six "picks." Still another drawing card will be Chamberlain's rope throwers and lassooers in a demonstration of cowboy pastimes.

Bass Point.

In addition to the many other sights of interest in Boston Harbor, including the warships, a view of Charlestown Navy Yard, the forts and picturesque marine scenes, the excursionists on the steamers General Lincoln and the Marthas Vineyard on their regular daily and evening trips to Bass Point and Nahant get a good view of the curious English prison ship which has recently arrived. One may easily identify it by the arrows on the ship's sails. The picturesque shores of Bass Point and Nahant are an attraction in themselves, to say nothing of the delightful sail to them on these staunch steamers, and at Bass Point the amusements and attractions are numerous and diversified enough to suit all tastes.

Globe Theatre.

A novel and entertaining programme has been arranged for the Globe patrons this week. Several high class vaudeville acts, the best and latest of motion picture plays and the Pathe Weekly, will be included in the bill. The vaudeville section will be enlivened by the Hazard Four, Merton and Merton, Jack Richards and the Emilies.

Orpheum Theatre.

The new bill of attractions at the Orpheum Theatre this week will include several lively vaudeville features that are new to Boston and a long list of spirited motion pictures.

Hub Theatre.

The usual two-hour concert will be given tonight, including a select list of moving pictures and illustrated songs.

Durbar Pictures.

"The Durbar in Kinemacolor" continues at Tremont Temple, showing all the glories of the royal visit to India and the crowning of King George and Queen Mary as Emperor and Empress. These pictures mark a new era in amusement. "The Birth of Flowers," used as an introductory subject, displays the evolution of various favorite flowers from bud to blossom.

Bowdoin Sq. Theatre.

Another evidence that Violet Mascotte and her Review Girls have been a success at the Bowdoin Square Theatre is shown by the fact that they are to continue for another week. "Keep smiling."

Scenic Temple.

For this week another breezy Summer entertainment has been arranged at the Scenic Temple. A short promenade concert will be given by Lenna Howe's Union Orchestra.

Providence Trolleys.

A cool and comfortable as well as highly interesting trip between Boston and Providence is offered by the Bay State Street Railway Company. Special cars, leaving Postoffice square daily and Sunday at 2:45 p. m. run through without change to Providence, arriving there in time to connect with the night boats for New York if desired.

Provincetown Trips.

The steamer Dorothy Bradford of the Provincetown line, on its daily trip to the tip of Cape Cod, gives its passengers a sail of 100 miles, as well as ample time to visit the historic old town and see the sights. The steamer has every equipment for the comfort of its passengers.

Satellite Trips.

King Philip Trips.

The daily trips of the steamer King Philip to the fishing grounds are attracting hundreds of persons who enjoy sailing into deep water. The fishing is always good on the spot where the King Philip drops anchor.

Gloucester Trips.

Quaint Gloucester and Cape Ann are especially inviting this time of year, and many new tourists are enjoying the sail along the North Shore.

Starting at 10 o'clock each week day the Gloucester line steamer sails from the north side of Central Wharf.

Blue Line Trips.

The cars of the Royal Blue Line Company, leaving the Hotel Brunswick daily and Sunday for the North Shore, Gloucester, Plymouth, Lexington and Concord, Nahant and every other day to Newport are the last word in automobiles. The company has seven of these cars in operation.

Vanderbilt Theatre for Children To Be Opened in November

George Tyler Refuses, However, to Disclose the Plans, Finding Managers Very Imitative.

LONDON, July 27.—George Tyler has sailed on the Kronprinzessin Cecilie. He declined to discuss the plans for the children's theatre which W. K. Vanderbilt is building on the roof of the Century Theatre, except to say that it will definitely open in November. He said to the International News Service correspondent:

"I am reticent on the subject out of consideration to my fellow managers as I don't want to disarrange their plans by outlining mine. When one gets an original theatrical idea there is an avalanche of imitators. For instance, last season I had the temerity to take the Irish Players from the Abbey Theatre in Dublin to America. Now some one is taking over the Ulster Players.

"When this season I announced my intention to produce Pierre Loti's 'Daughter of Heaven' various other managers then saw the aptness of China as a play scene with the result that there threatens to be an epidemic of Chinese plays in America this year. Likewise when I announced the children's theatre others began to see a light and they have made arrangements to produce children's plays."

Pierre Loti's "Daughter of Heaven," at the Century Theatre, will be the biggest production he has ever attempted. Basil Gill plays the Emperor. Mr. Tyler is undecided as to the actress who will play the Empress. Loti will go to New York for the rehearsals, his first visit since he served in the French navy, when he only saw San Francisco. Mr. Tyler has also two plays by Justin Huntley McCarthy. Robert Loraine opens the Hudson Theatre in September with "Man and Superman." And George Arliss will start a second season at Wallack's in "Disraeli."

The London "New Sin" Company will sail on September 6 and open at Powers' Theatre, Chicago. The author, McDonald Hastings, accompanies the company. He has written a fourth act for the play. Mr. Tyler has extensive plans for Viola Allen to be announced in New York. Jack Barrymore will star in a new play, and he intends starring Richard Bennett in a new play by Joe Medill Patterson.

• • •

The theatrical season in the Fall promises to be exceptionally interesting. Two great actor-managers have secured the rights to present American successes. Arthur Bouchier, for instance, will give a series of special matinees and will alternate Shakespeare with the recent American success, "The Havoc."

• • •

Sir Charles Wyndham and Miss Mary Moore will start their season with James Montgomery's new comedy "Real Money," after which they will present George Broadhurst's play "Bought and Paid For."

• • •

A great event of the season will be the production of the morality play "Everywoman," at the Drury Lane. Every one seems to think Arthur Collins, the manager, is taking an immense risk, but his intimate friends know him better than that.

• • •

Miss Alexandra Carlisle will play "Everywoman;" Miss Kate Rorke will play as "Truth;" and Miss Gladys Cooper, one of the prettiest young English actresses, will take the part of "Beauty." The first performance will take place on September 12.

Meanwhile the rage for Russian and other dancers shows no sign of abatement. Not only are there weird dances being given at five London variety halls, but the suburbs and provinces have caught the infection.

Pavlova, who was rich when she came here, has made another fortune in private entertainments at enormous fees.

MRS. GRAVES TELLS WOMEN SECRETS OF POULTRY SUCCESS

Best of Fowls, with Constant Care, Necessary to Get Good Results.

By MRS. S. HELEN GRAVES.

WHEN I started in with poultry it was with a couple of hens of different breeds, and of the best blood lines that could be had in the country. I found that one breed was doing much better than the other (which breed I will not mention). I dropped to one breed, as there might be one kind of care and treatment. I decided that the well-known breed of today, the White Plymouth Rock, should be my ideal. I have been in the business about twenty years, and today my favorite fowl for exhibition, utility and every purpose in connection with a farm is the beautiful White Rock.

In raising for either utility or home purposes, I will say that it does not cost any more to feed a thoroughbred fowl than it does a mongrel, and in the end pays you better to look at a thoroughbred in your yards and have the pleasure of stating to your friends and neighbors that it is of high grade.

Now, again, if you are aiming to be in the race with your fellow fanciers for the "blues," do not think you will be able to win with $3 or $5 birds, although these birds may be of the same strain as the prize winners from which your flock came. They may lack in the points which they should have to produce exhibition birds. There is a possibility that the descendants, after maturing, may have an exhibition bird among them, but it is one chance out of ten.

In Starting Know What You are Buying

Now in starting buy your stock on eggs of a breeder who can be well recommended to you by satisfied customer or some personal friend. Breeders know that a "satisfied customer" is a better advertisement for stock or eggs than anything else. After receiving your eggs let them rest for twenty-four hours, at least, keeping them cool, but not letting them get chilled. If you have purchased stock and they came from a long distance by train it is essential that they should have extra care and attention; they should not be given all the water they want at first, but a little at inervals.

A pen of birds, consisting of one male and four or five females, properly mated, makes a nice start for the amateur, providing he gets first class stock, as I have stated. It is well for me to say that a great deal depends on the strain of fowls as to their maturing in proper shape in time for the show room. To get winning fowls one must begin with the setting on the eggs under hens or incubators. Conditioning for the show room means attention through the entire life of the fowl. If a bird is not properly conditioned as to size, weight, plumage and color of comb and wattels, it is far from being in shape for the exhibition fees, and above all, the most coveted prize, a blue ribbon and an envied reputation if he has neglected the essential points.

The feeding of birds may not trouble the poultry raiser who must be away from home a day or two, as the dry feed hopper method makes work easy. I prefer to see that my chicks are fed. Most flocks have someone that can see that they are fed, and it should be so to be successful in this business.

Know That Your Work Is Done Right

To be successful in any work, one must se that it is attended to.

There is no better way to improve your flock than by buying better birds than you now own. A good time for buying pullets in the Fall. Get a few good birds and breed from them all through the Spring months. Buy two or three good birds, rather than ten common ones at equal cost. What is more beautiful than a flock on green grass?

Before getting the birds in their Winter quarters they are usually cared for in open front sheds or any house suitable for them. Leaving them in drafts and dampness is dangenerous. Colds and croup are the most discouraging ailments the breeder can have among his flocks. He might as well cut the heads off all his birds, unless he can quarantine the affected birds. In order to be safe from all vermin or lice, the houses or shelters should be carefully sprayed with a good disinfectant or whitewash. Green food is the most essential of all, and a most needy article to be fed in the Winter season. Alfalfa is a great food, providing you are not supplied with vegetables, such as cabbage, mangles, onions, etc. We raise them all, and can recommend them as the best of feeds for poultry. It seldom pays to depend on any single article of diet. Variety is as good for the hen as for yourself. It takes time and lots of thought to keep birds well, but it pays in the end, as the old saying: "Better pay the doctor than the undertaker."

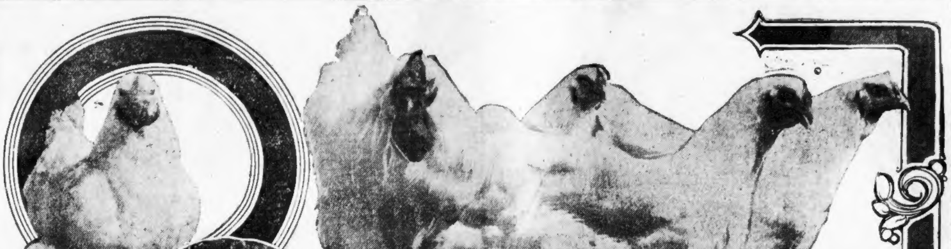
Pullets not laying, even when old enough; many pullets are not fed for growth as they should be for laying records. They have been kept short of food all season, or have been denied sufficient growing food, while given plenty of fat forming foods. If a fowl has been stunted because of insufficient good, it is just so much longer reaching laying maturity. Neglected in the feeding of proper foods is sure to tell on the growth of the birds.

Whether you are working towards market or show birds, you must not neglect to cull your flock closely, giving the chances to the best birds that remain and profit from it. If you have birds that you are not quite sure are good enough for your purpose, do not use them.

Upon the male bird depends much of your success in breeding. He is half the pen, especially if he is active, vigorous and full of life. A great many of the failures with poultry are due to a lack of constitutional vigor which all profitable fowls possess. Early pullets will soon show bright faces and probably an egg or two. Do not think this is a sign of Winter eggs. If you are wise, you will move pullets at least every few days to keep them from laying, if you wish them to lay when eggs are at their fancy price. Otherwise they will moult late in the Fall and lay no more till late in April.

SOUTHBORO WOMAN WINS FAME AS POULTRY EXPERT

Mrs. S. Helen Graves of the Rockandotte Farm, who holds the distinction of being the East's only judge, has won notable victories at the largest exhibitions, and has demonstrated that her sex can equal the efforts of man in another of America's great industries, the running of a mammoth plant and the production of high-class stock.



MRS. S. HELEN GRAVES

A Boston White Rock male champion two consecutive years and at Baltimore in 1912. His son has also attained championship honors.

MRS. S. H. GRAVES of Southboro, Mass., the only poultry judge of her sex in the Northern and Eastern States, has equaled the success of the masculine leaders in the industry.

Mrs. Graves is entitled to the distinction of being called a poultry expert. Few men possess as much skill and business ability. As the co-worker of her husband, W. R. Graves, the "Rockandotte" Farm has built up a business which reaches to all parts of America and extends to Europe.

Mrs. Graves was born in the town of Durham, Ct., in 1873 and is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Baldwin, who are making their home with her for the Summer. In 1890, when seventeen years of age, she married Harry W. Graves of Higganum, Ct., better known as the "White Rock King of America." After his death in 1905 she married the well known White Wyandotte specialist, who also has a record in the poultry business, W. R. Graves of West Springfield, Mass.

Mrs. Graves is a typical New Englander and a descendant of one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

Mrs. Graves married her second husband in the same house as she did her first, in the same room and the same spot.

Both had the same surname, but were no relation. Both were in the same business.

Mrs. Graves has bred and exhibited poultry since a young girl, and her ability as a fancier and judge is well established. Mrs. Graves was one of the judges at the great Southern International Poultry Show at Atlanta, Ga., last December, where she helped place the awards of $3,000 in gold and about 150 trophies in cups and medals. In connection with her judging she gave an interesting lecture before a crowded audience, her topic being the "Breeding of White Wyandottes."

Devote All Their Time to Poultry

Mrs. Graves and Judge Graves devote their whole time to their poultry plant in Southboro. They have been shipping their eggs to Germany this Spring. Mrs. Graves has been introduced as the "White Rock Queen of America."

About 1,000 pullets and cockerels are ranging in freedom over this farm, which is an ideal one for poultry.

Mrs. Graves travels all over the country with her birds and never fails to bring home the coveted "blues" and trophies. She has an elaborate array of cups and trophies that any one might be proud to own, these telling the story of the quality of stock.

Mrs. Graves delivered a lecture before the school children of Southboro a few weeks ago to arouse their enthusiasm in poultry. Her topic was "Fancy Poultry and Why We Should Raise It." She also gives a prize to the boy or girl who writes the best article on poultry.

Mrs. Graves is noted for her ability as horsewoman and above all a crack shot with a double-barrel shotgun. She has killed scores of the chickens. She waited about two hours one day for her victim, who had been taking her chicks and succeeded in capturing a large black snake which measured about six feet in length.

As a poultry surgeon, she is ready with her needle and silk, or bandages and [illegible], and never fails to pull the patient through.

Many a person has said to her, "I don't like chickens," and Mrs. Graves has replied: "I did not either when I was a girl at home and detested the thought of having to throw out a couple of quarts of feed to a few mongrels, but it has been cultivated thoroughly through my life since the winning of my first 'Blue Ribbon' at Hartford, Ct., in 1900, and my second winning of the Blues at Madison Square Garden the following month in 1901."

Mrs. Graves is a great believer in the thoroughbred part of the business, for she will have nothing on the farm except thoroughbreds if she has her way.

Mrs. Graves in the Role of a Heroine

Among her most favorite pets is a coal black Morgan horse, which she bought when he was only three years old and drove herself to her home, through a wood road seven miles before coming to a house. He is now eighteen years old, but many will take him to be seven or eight, for he shows the same care that she gives to her feathered white beauties. Mrs. Graves has had the honor of saving two persons from drowning in deep water, one being a young woman and the other a boy twelve years old. The woman fell from a wharf at one of the landings on the Connecticut River, and the boy fell off from her father's high dam. Mrs. Graves is a cultured woman, and is well versed in politics, baseball and all current events of everyday life.

As breeders of White Rocks and White Wyandottes Mr. and Mrs. Graves have won many [illegible] prizes. They have won the "Blues" at Madison Square Garden, N. Y., Boston, Chicago, Memphis, Tenn., and at Nashville, Baltimore, Md., the largest shows and at other exhibitions.

The "Rockandotte" record at Baltimore, 1911-1912, indicates the position the farm has attained.

Winning on ten entries White Rocks: First and second cock, first hen, first and third cockerel, first pullet, first pen; medal, best bird in American class; cup, best pullet in American class; cup, best display; $5 gold, best two males and four females; five club ribbons.

Cranberry Scald Is Not Controllable

New or Wet Bogs Suffer Most from Fungus, and Injury from Spray Offsets Benefits.

By O. G. ANDERSON.

Scald in cranberries is a fungus disease, not as some think an effect of the sun, asserts Dr. H. J. Franklin of the Massachusetts Agricultural College. This fungus attacks blossoms, fruit, vines and leaves, and lives in the tissues from year to year. Spores form on the leaves and cause their death, and the fallen leaves bring the fungus to the vines when the bogs are flooded. The blossoms are often first affected by scald, but the disease lingers on the vines and later develops in the berries.

Another name for scald is blast fungus, derived from its effect in drying up and blasting the blossoms. In the berries the fungus first appears as a small speck. It then develops in rings and forms brownish-black pustules.

Scald is most prevalent on new bogs and along the margins of ditches, on heavily-vined and poorly drained bogs. In New Jersey the damage it produces is much greater than in Massachusetts, partly on account of the higher temperature and longer growing season. Bordeaux mixture and resin fishoil soap largely control the fungus in New Jersey. In Massachusetts it appears that injury caused by the numerous sprayings that are necessary completely offsets the benefits obtained.

EDITOR'S ACRE

By PROF. R. W. NEAL.

Game laws are usually thought of as enactments secured by the gentleman hunter to prevent the rag-tag-and-bobtail hunter from bagging all the game before the gentleman can get to it. Only now and then is the farmer or fruit-grower brought up, face-to-face, with the fact that the game laws directly affect him and his business. With the exception of the laws protecting deer, and possibly one or two other provisions, he scarcely thinks himself interested in the matter at all, beyond feeling grateful that trespassing on his land is lessened through this legislation.

Nevertheless, the game laws directly affect the farmer, and indeed, were enacted more for his sake than for the sake of the gentlemanly hunter. Without them, that "balance of nature" which, on the whole, tends to keep one set of influences always offset by another, would scarcely be maintained. It is nature's way to balance insect against bird, disease against controlling condition—a harsh way, but an effective check to extreme competion. When insects thrive, birds multiply, for their food supply is abundant and easily got, and thereupon the insects begin to disappear. The same is true of weeds; a column list of all the birds that devour weed seeds in considerable quantities would occupy several inches of space. Then when food becomes scarce and hard to get the birds decrease.

And under present conditions, the birds have more enemies to overcome than they had formerly. With guns on every farm, and in the hands of half the boys and men of every town and village—indeed, in the hands of almost every immigrant—and with few places beyond reach of hunters of some sort or other, the birds in any well-settled district wage an unequal struggle for existence. Only the game laws preserve them in reasonable numbers. And because, as authorities assure us, most birds do more good than harm, except when they become extremely numerous, it is fortunate that protection is thus extended them through legislation.

Were our game laws repealed, we should soon realize that a large proportion of almost every crop depend on them.

Learn When to Cut Your Alfalfa Hay

By O. G. ANDERSON.

To grow alfalfa, first inoculate the soil—and that's not easy—then learn to cut the crop at the right time, is the substance of the comment by Professor Sidney B. Haskell of the Department of Agronomy at the Massachusetts Agricultural College.

Unless both these things be done, says Professor Haskell, the crop harvested will not be of such good quality, and the plant will be permanently injured.

A cardinal principle to observe is, never to allow ripening. Judge the time by the new buds. New buds are to be found at the base of the plants, and just before these buds are large enough to be cut by a mowing machine the crop should be harvested.

The last crop removed from the field during the season should moreover not be cut too late to permit an aftergrowth. A thick, young growth of alfalfa left on the land to Winter over acts as an excellent mulch, and often prevents serious Winter killing of plants.

At least five days of good weather should be allowed to cut alfalfa properly. To save the leaves the crop should be put up in tumbles before the leaves have dried up. The sweating process in the tumble apparently dries the hay, but retains the value of the leaves. If the tumbles are rebuilt once a day, the quality of the hay will be improved

Whitens the Crow's Character.

The crow's character is not so black as his feathers and his reputation, says W. C. Forbush of Rutland, Mass., who has been looking into the question of damage done by these birds. Crows are the friends of the farmer. They destroy injurious insects which do the farmer more injury than the crow does.

The crow can be a pest to the farmer only during the spring months. Even then, with proper precautions, growing crops can be safeguarded unless the crows are very persistent. During the rest of the summer and autumn, their principal food is insects, and they may be seen at any time during the summer in large numbers walking over the fields and gorging themselves with the little green grasshopper pests that destroy the farmers' grass, and which in some cases have to be destroyed by special means.

Let Us Have Our Chops Home Grown

Obstacles to the New England Sheep Industry Can All Be Overcome.

The bleat of the lambs, the tinkle of the wether's bell are still, and our lamb chops are not home grown. The sheep raising industry is as nearly dead in New England as an industry can be and still hold its name. Western competition, parasites, dogs, and lack of fences are the causes of this decline. Yet the obstacles to sheep growing can be profitably surmounted. Sheep raising should be taken up especially on a small scale in the hill towns.

Western competition does not hurt the market for lamb and mutton, and prices are excellent. Care in watering and pasturing and in buying new sheep will keep down the liver fluke and other parasites. A good fence, kept in repair, will keep off dogs. It is not so difficult to keep sheep well fenced in as is supposed.

Thus the obstacles can all be overcome. Many a New England farmer has a rocky upland pasture where cattle will barely survive, but where sheep will flourish. A few courageous ones are now keeping sheep, and they will tell you there is a good profit in the business properly managed.

The State agricultural colleges are trying to rejuvenate sheep culture, and a New England sheep raisers' association has been formed. We look for better days. Let us have our own lamb chops.

RURAL MAIL-BAG

WINTER VEGETABLES AT HOME.

Rural Mail Bag:

Is there any way of having really fresh vegetables in Winter besides buying them? We live in a village and if we buy fresh vegetables in Winter I think they cost more even than they do in the city.

M. L. P.

A simple solution of the vegetable question in Winter is the hotbed. Hotbeds are inexpensive, and they can be made large enough at no great cost to keep an ordinary size family well supplied with vegetables through the cold months.

COLLEGE GRADUATE MADE GOOD.

Rural Mail Bag:

Several boys have asked me recently if I think it would pay them to go to an agricultural college and take up agriculture as a profession. As I am a graduate of an agricultural college my experience may be interesting to high school graduates who are thinking of going into farming as a profession. I was graduated two years ago and the first year worked at home. My father was willing to let me direct the work, or rather to co-operate with him and act as "expert adviser." We had very good luck that year and the farm paid better than it ever had. As a result several other farmers spoke to me about helping in the same way on the farms. The outcome was that I agreed to supervise ten farms at a stated cash salary, with a percentage on the crops raised, estimating at an agreed rate.

Although the dry weather has interfered with crops, we have good prospects on all these farms, and I expect to clear $2,000 on my contract and at the same time make my employers money on their investment. I invested in a motorcycle in order to travel quickly, and I visit every one of the ten farms two or three times a week. My employers seem entirely satisfied, and as next year ought to see us in better condition to make more money than this I feel that I am doing well personally as a result of my college training and also helping others.

GROW BEEF CALVES ON THE HOME PLACE

SEVERAL methods are practicable for the profitable production of baby beef on the small farm, W. A. Martin maintains in the Orange Judd Farmer. Making beef on small farms is not likely to become an avenue to get-rich quick, he says, but for people who like to tend good calves, those not adjacent to the extra good milk markets may avoid the low price of milk, make baby beef, and still feed the crops of the farm to cattle at a profit. The stability of the market seems assured.

The very first thing to be considered is the quality of the cattle from which these baby beeves are to be developed. Start wrong, or feed improperly and at eighteen months, instead of a baby beef, you will have a feeder that has cost a lot of feed and care, but has produced a large crop of disappointment.

Good Sire Indispensable in Stock Raising.

The sire should be a registered beef bull, not only registered, but an outstanding good one. He should stand on relatively short legs, placed wide apart and going straight to the ground. His middle should be good and thick, deep and strong and this middle should connect two good, well-balanced ends. We expect the head to be rather wide between the eyes and relatively short, the eyes rather large and bright looking. Above all else, the outline of the bull should impress one with massiveness, the form be compact with must be broad and thickly-fleshed, the unhair and skin fine and smooth. The back should be carried straight, no tucking in the flank. See to it that the fore rib has plenty of spring, for no flat-ribbed beast has ever yet been popular as a candidate for the block.

The female should be of a large, rather loosely made type, the back quarter heavy, while the fore-quarter may be a bit light. Especial attention should be paid to the udders the cows carry. Given a cow of medium size of refined appearance and chuck full of quality, mated to the type bull described above, and the calf will be bred right.

Perhaps the best type of cow for this work is the old-fashioned Shorthorn. Not only are such cows par excellence for this job, but numerically they are strong. I have had four Shorthorn grade cows, which from January 1, 1911, to January 1, 1912, made a trifle over 1,000 pounds of butter fat. They cost $220, an average of only $55. They can be sold to the butcher when dry for almost first cost. They were bought either with a calf at side or just ready to calve.

First Care of the Calf to Get Best Results.

Now the proposition is to mate this type cow to the best type beef bull. Take the calf away from the cow when three or four days old and feed by hand fresh, warm, whole milk, only 10 to 12 pounds a day in two feeds. By the time the calf is ten days old he can eat a little shelled corn.

It is not much of a task to feed this little fellow by hand for a few days. Soon he will be eating from a box. Place bright, fresh hay for him to pick at. Alfalfa is the best, but nice, bright clover, especially alsike, is very good. A bundle of bright corn fodder set against the side of the pen is enjoyed. Remember that variety is the spice of the calf's existence, and feed all he will clean up clean.

By the time it is three or four weeks old, I would add oats, not ground, to the corn, equal parts, and also a little bran. If the calf comes in October or November, which are excellent months, give silage, ad libitum, and feed the grain on top of the silage.

By the time the calf is three or four months old and is eating finely, I would substitute skim milk (fresh sweet) for the whole milk, taking say a week to make the change. Don't feed to much skim milk, not over 15 to 20 pounds a day. By the time the calf is six months old the milk may stop entirely. I have stopped milk on 100-day calves that were eating extra well, and they never checked a particle.

Cleanliness, Rations and Good Profit.

Care must be taken at all times the pens are kept clean. This is especially important while the calves are small, for dirty pens and too much milk are prolific causes of scours. Let a calf once get a dose of scours and it is awfully hard to get him going again. If the calf was dropped in October, by May 15 he will be a good, big, husky youngster to go on pasture in fine shape.

Provide plenty of grass and shade, with abundance of water. During May and June and frequently July, it may not pay to feed grain; often a full manger of hay in a cool shade will do until new corn comes, but whatever the method, keep the calf coming.

If he seems to stop growing, if the grass gets short, supply feed of some kind. In September start feeding corn and fodder all he will eat in a few days and soon add extra ears chopped fine. An excellent ration for the Winter is corn silage, chopped ear corn, alfalfa or clover hay, a little corn stover, and by January add a pound a day of either cottonseed or oil meal. If no hogs follow the cattle, it would pay to grind the corn, otherwise not. Cattle handled this way are ready for market by May 1, and usually hit what is known as a market between corn and grass. That is, most of the heavy corn fed cattle are gone and grass cattle have not started.

The cows can be milked. Say they give 6,000 pounds of 4 per cent. milk. It takes 1,000 for the calf, you have 5,000 pounds, or 200 pounds of butter fat at 30 cents, and for the past few years Elgin prices have been higher for cows that freshened in the Fall. You have $60 and over 4,000 pounds of skim milk. The calf, either male or female, should weigh at 18 months, if fed properly, at least 1,000 pounds on the average. Some will do far better. At $6, a very conservative figure, we have another $60.

HERE SHE IS!

"The Lady With the Green Parasol"

Identify her and you will get $100

Meet her at Revere Beach This Afternoon at 2 o'clock

She will stroll along Ocean avenue, the beach and the Boulevard from Condit's dance hall to Revere street. The only requirement is that the person who identifies "The Lady with the Green Parasol" have in his or her hand, IN PLAIN SIGHT, a copy of today's Sunday AMERICAN, and shall say to her, "You are the Lady with the Green Parasol."
